U. S. PROSPERITY STRIDES AHEAD; STATE IN STEP

Roads, Buildings, and Steel Factors.

BY ARTHUR EVANS.

October registers a halt in unemployment. Fall activities are taking up the summer slack. Hard road building is serving as a job reservoir and throughout the country is giving work to great numbers of semi-skilled and common laborers who otherwise would be jobless.

Basic industries are averaging about the same speed as a month ago. In September steel and iron sagged 1 1-3 per cent in employment, while textiles picked up 1 1-3 per cent. Building construction seems to have sidestepped the slump which some were predicting, and in nearly all the larger cities it is maintaining the old steady pace. Such is the picture sketched by the employment service of the United States department of labor in its monthly survey, which says that on Oct. 1 "very little unemployment is reported in any district."

Illinois Conditions Good.

Harry Cohen, district director, reports that in Illinois conditions in October are much better than they have been for months.

"Very little voluntary unemployment is reported," he says, "and practically all industries seem to be gradually increasing their pay rolls. State building activities, which promise to be during the winter months, are growing ahead, with every indication of again resuming proportions of a building boom. An acute shortage of building trades mechanics exists. Coal output has increased substantially, reflecting additional employment.

"In Chicago, steel operations are holding up well. The mills are operating at about 90 per cent of capacity, twenty-three out of twenty-seven blast furnaces are working. Building activities, as measured by permits, are surpassing all former records. Building contracts so far this year show a 39 per cent increase over last year."

Pay Roll Gains Are Given.

More money was in the pay envelopes of Illinois industries in September than in August, although somewhat fewer hands were on the pay rolls. Average weekly earnings for factory workers in the state were $27.72, as against $26.74 in August, an increase of approximately a dollar. They stood $2.34 a week higher than a year ago, when factory wages averaged $25.38.

For all industries, the average weekly earnings were $24.95 in September, as against $27.56 in August and $24.36 in September, 1922.

These figures are from the monthly report issued last night by the general advisory board of the Illinois department of labor.

Reports from 1,236 Illinois concerns show these establishments had 341,231 workers last September as against 302,766 in September, 1922, an expansion of 38,465 more workers, or over 12 per cent for these concerns alone, during the year.

A Survey of the Midwest.

Out of sixty-five industrial centers, sixty-eight reported employment increases Oct. 1, while thirty-six had decreases. Chicago was among the decreasing cities, but the rate of unemployment was reported as smaller than in recent months.

The following survey gives an outline of conditions in the midwest:

ILLINOIS DOWNSTATE

East St. Louis district—Employment continues steady; labor supply equals the demand. A slight increase in building hours pay rolls. All plants are running.

Springfield, Ill.—Shortage of farm help and a slight shortage in common labor exist. Increased activities are noticeable in the mining industry.

Joliet—A surplus of common labor exists. All of the larger plants are working full time.

Decatur—Industrial conditions are very good. Practically all plants are working full time, with some working overtime. Considerable improvement is noted in coal mining. Nearly all of the mines in this locality are working every day. Overtime prevails in iron, metal, and corn products industries.

Rockford—Supply of workers equals demand. All plants are operating and a local watch company is working overtime.

Rockford—Employment conditions improving, but agriculturel implement industry depressed. Building exceptionally good.

Aurora—Employment outlook good. Most shopmen fully employed. Slight

WICKERSHAM'S LEAGUE TALK WANTED BY N. U.

Northwestern university has asked George W. Wickersham, counsel to the League of Nations Nonpartisan association, to deliver before the law school the speech on the league which the regents of the University of Michigan recently refused to permit him to give there.

Mr. Wickersham in New York yesterday made public the telegram which he received from Dean Wigmore of Northwestern's law school.

Part of the telegram follows:

"Referring to the news of the refusal of the University of Michigan to permit a discussion of the league of nations in the university building, I prefer you the confident belief that no other university authorities will take that view, and on behalf of the faculty of law of Northwestern university I ask for the date vacated by Michigan university.

"The motto of Northwestern university is 'Quacumque Sunt Vera.' The faculties and not the regents or trustees are the custodians of educational research, and when they placed in the curriculum the subjects of political science and international law they did not conceive the range of discussion to be limited to such matters as the hours of county commissioners or the treating of Louis XIV. Please name your date."

2,000 FIGHTERS CHECK FIRE AT EDGE OF CITY

Glendale, Cal., Oct. 13.—Thirty minutes after church bells had sounded a warning for residents to prepare to leave their homes, flames from a forest and brush fire north of Eagle Rock City, recently annexed to Los Angeles, apparently had been checked at the crest of the last ridge separating them from the community.

About 2,000 men tonight were battling the flames which are inaccessible to fire fighting apparatus.

It was predicted that should the fire cross the ridge it would be impossible to prevent destruction of many fashionable hillside residences.

The fire started on the outskirts of Montrose and for a time threatened to wipe out that town, as well as La Crescenta and La Canada.

Cops Without Masks Rescue Stolen Cheese

Ambitious thieves made a valiant effort last night to purloin $6,000 worth of assorted cheese, but the job was more than they could handle.

The cheese, including the more fragrant varieties of limburger and camembert, was loaded aboard a truck belonging to J. L. Kraft & Brothers' company in their garage at 113 West Huron street. Shortly after dusk the truck disappeared. Without gas masks detectives went on the trail. At Austin avenue and Wells street the stolen cheese was recovered intact in the truck.

MISSOURIANS ARE NO AID TO STOKES

14 Clear Wife of Charges —Say He Offered Pay.

Boonville, Mo., Oct. 13.—[By the Associated Press.]—All fourteen witnesses examined here today in the Stokes divorce case positively denied that Mrs. W. E. D. Stokes had ever been at Bunceton or Boonville, Mo., nineteen years ago, as alleged by her husband, wealthy New York capitalist and sportsman. Stokes, in his suit brought against his wife, charges her with indiscretions in Bunceton when she was a girl known as Helen Elwood.

With completion of the questioning of the witnesses, the case shifted once more to New York, when Mrs. Stokes' Isadore Shapiro, her counsel; and Mrs. C. A. Meservey, friend of Mrs. Stokes, departed for the east tonight.

The bulk of testimony was taken in the law office of Roy D. Williams of Boonville, who was appointed special commissioner for the state of New York by Judge Mahoney of New York, who is hearing the Stokes case.

Thrilling Ride for Truth.

In an automobile, slipping and sliding over the roads made muddy by a rain that fell nearly all night and today, Mrs. Stokes, Commissioner Williams, George Brownfield, Stokes' legal representative here, and a stenographer journeyed to Ravenswood farm, sixteen miles south of Boonville, the home of Nelson Leonard. Leonard was ill in bed with blood poisoning and could not attend the hearing.

He was the owner of a tallying in 1904, when, it is alleged by witnesses for Stokes, Mrs. Stokes, then Helen Elwood, was the leader of several gay sallies near Bunceton. Leonard denied that Mrs. Stokes had ever been in Bunceton or on the ranch.

After the taking of testimony at the Leonard home, Mrs. Stokes and her party went by motor to Bunceton, six miles farther south. Mrs. Stokes said that she was curious to see the town, as she said, she had heard of it frequently recently.

Says Stokes Offered $1,500.

Earlier in the day Harmon Meyer, a Bunceton grocer, testified that Stokes offered him $1,500 to go to New York as a witness for him.

Mrs. Stokes came from New York so that Bunceton citizens could view her and say whether or not she visited there in 1904, as was sworn to last week in New York by Mrs. Alice S. Mills of Kansas City and Miss Katherine Krause of Boonville, formerly of Bunceton.

The two women said Mrs. Stokes, then Helen Elwood, was an unchaperoned guest at the home of Edgar Wallace in Bunceton, that she attended parties at the hotel there, and went on "tally ho" rides.

Edgar Wallace, now of New York, is named as a co-respondent. He formerly lived in Bunceton.

Fails to Recognize Her.

One of the principal witnesses today was Arthur A. Wallace, brother of Edgar. The youthful wife was asked to stand.

"Mr. Wallace," asked Shapiro, "will you please look at this defendant and tell us if you have ever seen her before?"

Wallace gazed at the witness a few seconds, while she faced him. She then three feet away.

"I never saw her in Bunceton—I never saw her before in my life," he answered.

Wallace testified that when Stokes was in Bonneville he hired Paul Wagner to get evidence in his favor. Wagner later boasted, according to the witness, that the New York millionaire was paying him to keep an eye on the Wallace brothers.

HAYNES PUTS COOLIDGE INTO BONE DRY LINE

Modifies His Speech, but Stands Pat.

(By a Staff Correspondent.)

Washington, D. C., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—Prohibition Commissioner Haynes created a political stir here today by attempting, in an address before the citizenship conference, to commit the Coolidge administration to the bone dry Volsteadian policy laid down by the late President Harding.

There was some variation between what Haynes said he would say and what he actually said, but he announced afterwards that he stood pat on his "advance," which contained the following interesting excerpt:

"President Coolidge stands four square for enforcement of the prohibition law. He is no less wholehearted regarding this matter than the late President Harding. The department of justice is also dead in earnest."

Haynes Modifies Speech.

When he stood before the 1,000 or more dry workers who are attending the conference Mr. Haynes modified his text and stated that since his taking the oath of office "President Coolidge has supported me 100 per cent, even as President Harding did.

"He has given me magnificent support in our efforts to support the law," Haynes said.

Haynes' declaration was received with the greatest enthusiasm by the delegates some of whom previously had seemed to be somewhat apprehensive that Mr. Coolidge would not be as dry as President Harding declared himself in his western speeches just before his death. They asserted that Haynes was speaking with ambiguity, but nevertheless they are eager to hear what the President himself will say when he receives them at the White House Monday.

They are anxious to learn whether he "stands four square" on the declaration made by the late President Harding against modification of the Volstead act, or whether he will content himself with a perfunctory pronouncement in favor of law enforcement.

Shies at Ten Year Statement.

Haynes had a difficult time sticking to his text. In the prepared "advance" it was stated that "he intimated it would take approximately ten years to bring about country-wide enforcement of prohibition," but later asked that this statement be omitted.

"Haynes deplored the amazing subsidence of the sentiment which brought about the adoption of the eighteenth amendment and the enactment of the Volstead law.

"I do not believe," he said, "that the friends of enforcement have any adequate conception of the amazing onslaught which is now in progress and is under contemplation." And he added: "I doubt whether the friends of enforcement ever contemplated that there would be such a quick subsidence of crystallized, organized sentiment and agitation to uphold a successful enforcement of the law."

Mrs. Robins Talks.

Raymond Robins of Chicago was scheduled to address the conference tonight, but he did not arrive in time, so Mrs. Robins substituted on the subject "The Social Peril of Lawlessness."

Wayne B. Wheeler, spokesman for the Anti-Saloon league, told the conference that "the churches must see that 100 per cent of the voters among their members are registered and voting at elections or else quit praying 'Thy kingdom come'."

Public sentiment must be aroused to the point where it will oust officials who do not enforce prohibition, he said.

Bishop William F. McDowell of the Methodist Episcopal church declared that candidates for the presidency in the approaching campaign must pledge themselves for prohibition enforcement.

"The country cannot today exist half drunk and half sober; half wet and half dry; half obedient to the law and half in defiance of the law," the bishop said.

Three Children Die in Fire at Lanesville, Ind.

Lanesville, Ind., Oct. 13.—Trapped in a bedroom on the second floor, three small children were burned to death tonight when fire of undetermined origin destroyed a combined business and residence building here.

Victims of the fire were children of Charles Stoeber: Josephine, 12; Chester Jr., 10, and William, 6.

Bomb Set Off in Cubs Park; $2,000 Loss

Explosion of a bomb at 5 o'clock this morning partly wrecked the ticket offices on the Sheffield avenue side of Cubs Park. Damage was estimated at $2,000.

So terrific was the detonation that hundreds of residents of the district surrounding Addison street and Sheffield avenue were awakened, and windows were shattered in houses and stores for blocks around the park.

Several alarms were turned in but no flames broke out.

Early investigation indicated that no one was injured, the park watchman having been in another section when the bomb was set off.

Club officials could give no reason for the bombing. They said it would not interfere with the city series.

Auto Plunges Into River; 2 Believed Dead

One man is known to have lost his life and one other is believed to have been drowned when an auto plunged through the guard chains of an open bridge over the Calumet river at 106th street last night. At an early hour this morning the car had been raised and one body recovered.

The bridge was open to permit the passage of a freighter. The heavy chains had been raised and red lights were flashing a warning. Adolph Delrich, night watchman at the Keystone elevator, was standing in front of the draw. He saw the car approaching and shouted to the autoists to stop. But the car sped on, crashed through the chains and plunged into the river.

Identify the Body.

One body was recovered after several hours' work by the police, members of the coast guard and the crew of the fire tug Dennis J. Swenie. It was identified as that of Joseph Lemer. He is a mill worker living at 10722 Green Bay avenue, South Chicago.

Rudolph Lemer, brother of the dead man, told the police he understood one other was riding in the auto. He gave the name of Art Peterson, 10761 Mackinaw avenue. He had not returned home early today and several persons reported seeing him in the car.

Witnesses told the police it was inconceivable that the men did not know the bridge was open. They were at loss to explain why the driver did not stop.

The dragging of the river for the other body continued all through the night.

Death Toll Mounts Fast.

Besides the death in the South Chicago accident Cook county's auto death toll for the year was raised yesterday to 544. Earlier in the day one fireman was killed and five others injured in two crashes between fire trucks and other vehicles.

Louise De Rose, 7 years old, 1934 West Ohio street, was bowled to death beneath the wheels of a "vampire" truck at Chicago avenue and Lincoln street. The driver of the truck did not stop and witnesses failed to obtain the license number.

Insurance Patrolman Killed.

Frank Zielinghof, 25, 5248 North Paulina street, a fireman attached to insurance patrol No. 8, was killed when the fire truck on which he was riding crashed into an express truck driven by John Lux, 523 South Boulevard, Evanston, at Greenview and Belmont avenues.

Lux told police that he had been driving on the right side of the street when the fire truck skidded on the wet pavement and crashed head on into his truck. Zielinghof was thrown from his seat and fell beneath the wheels of the truck.

Five Firemen Hurt.

Five firemen were injured when a chemical truck was struck by a truck driven by Charles Grimes, 2501 West 69th street, at Talman and Milwaukee avenues. The truck crashed into the rear end of the fire auto, which was swung around and struck a lamp post.

Lieut. G. E. Gerstung, who was in charge of the fire squad, was not injured, though he was thrown to the street. The injured members of the squad are: Walter Tauber, chauffeur, 2342 North California avenue; William O'Neil, 2141 North Spaulding avenue, and A. W. Blackburgh, 2648 North Linden avenue, who were taken to their homes; Leo Evinus, 502 Major avenue, and John Oster, 3736 Diversey avenue, who remained on duty.

COAL DOWN 33% COST OF BREAD TO BE SLASHED

Pay Rollers Face Loss of Jobs.

BY JOHN CLAYTON.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1923: By The Chicago Tribune.]

BERLIN, Oct. 13.—With full powers of a dictator conferred upon him by the reichstag today, Chancellor Stresemann immediately began the herculean task of trying to put Germany back on its feet. According to officials close to him, the "chancellor does not propose to waste any time in striking at the various evils under which the German republic is crumbling.

His first two orders will provide for a cut in bread prices and for severe penalties for profiteering in foodstuffs.

Tax Off; Coal Price Drops.

A decree lifting the coal tax, which was issued this morning, has already resulted in a 33 per cent reduction in the price of coal.

The minister of economics tonight gave orders to the German railway employes to take up work under the French railway direction, thus assuring a resumption of railway service throughout the Rhineland and Ruhr.

The stabilization of the mark or the issue of a new gold currency also are vital questions. Certain portions of the cabinet oppose the establishment of a new gold mark at once, and there is a possibility that for the next few weeks values based on grain prices will be made the standard. The industrialists are demanding a gold basis for money.

Plans Other Drastic Laws.

Following the decree of yesterday, ordering the payment of all taxes on a gold basis, a member of his cabinet told THE TRIBUNE tonight that Herr Stresemann will immediately set up laws:

To force the banks to aid the government in stabilizing Germany's currency.

To make a 10 per cent cut in the number of government employes.

To bring about tax revision and force the wealthy industrialists to pay their share.

To balance the nation's budget.

Will Follow Mussolini's Path.

"Chancellor Stresemann proposes to rule Germany as Premier Mussolini has ruled Italy from the day he set himself up as dictator," the official said. "He proposes to adopt stern and effective measures."

The powers of dictator were conferred upon Chancellor Stresemann by the reichstag by a vote of 315 to 14. Seven members, including Hugo Stinnes, Germany's richest man, abstained from voting.

Nationalists Walk Out.

The nationalists registed their indignation by walking out of the hall when the vote was called, but 347 deputies, including many communists and twenty members of the Bavarian People's party, remained. However, only 326 was necessary for a quorum.

When the session opened at 1 o'clock there were not more than fifteen absentees. Dr. Pfeiffer, German ambassador to Vienna, had arrived last night to vote for Chancellor Stresemann, while Dr. Koester, minister at Riga, reached Berlin this morning. To them went the honor of having come the greatest distance to take part, but some seventy-five deputies from the south or west of Germany spent a night traveling in order to cast their dictatorship possible.

When President Loebe called the session to order the diplomatic boxes were filled and every spectator's seat was taken. Huge crowds were gathered outside the various entrances.

Stresemann Argues with Stinnes.

Little time was wasted on debate. At 1:50 o'clock Herr Loebe called for a vote. The members of the cabinet and other officials who also are members of the reichstag descended from their benches to the floor of the house to cast their ballots.

Chancellor Stresemann, passing Hugo Stinnes, who had not thrown off the session plucking his little black beard, noticed that the industrial leader had a blue slip, or blank ballot, in his hand. Chancellor Stresemann spoke long and earnestly with Herr Stinnes, gesticulating and pounding his open left hand with his right fist, but the blue slip was dropped into the ballot vase.

After Herr Loebe had announced that the "authorization act" had become law, it was easy to discern the look of triumph on the face of the chancellor. He turned to a group of his supporters and said:

"Now the work of reconstruction can begin."

The "Fatherland Alliance" in a sur-

sion this afternoon immediately following the passage of the authorization act declared they would refuse to cooperate with the Stresemann dictatorship and demanded a national monarchistic dictatorship, with a return to the federative constitutional system, with two chambers for parliament. Prof. Bauer of Munich presided.

Cannot Guarantee Coal Payments.

While the coal tax is lifted to permit the German mines to furnish cheaper coal to the factories and workers, the German government at present is unable to guarantee payment to the Ruhr mines for delivery of reparations coal or to make other reparations deliveries. Chancellor Stresemann informed Hugo Stinnes in a letter yesterday, which the coal baron published tonight.

For a short period of transition the government will continue subsidies to the mines to enable them to pay wages, but the policy of turning to the printing presses for every need must cease, the chancellor declared. He said that until Germany is assured of an international loan the heavy expenses of financing the coal industry of the Ruhr cannot be undertaken.

"We have rescinded the order of Jan. 13 prohibiting the delivery of reparations coal and through this we have declared our willingness to continue reparations deliveries when the financial situation of the nation permits," the letter says. "At present it is impossible to speak of such an eventuality. The government, therefore, cannot guarantee to your friends payment of reparations and compensation for coal seized or compensation for coal taxes taken over."

Refuses to Give Up Railways.

Chancellor Stresemann's letter replied to the demands of Oct. 7 by the coal barons. These were included in a letter over Herr Stinnes' signature, which the coal barons published with the chancellor's reply, which contained a hint that the Westphalian coal industry hoped to participate in the operation of Germany's railways, with the possibility of taking over the state railways of the nation, of Prussia, or of the Rhineland and Westphalia for private operation. To this suggestion Chancellor Stresemann informed the industrialists that they may use the railways under control of the French, but they must not forget that these railways are the property of the German government.

Chancellor Stresemann promised that the coal commissioners would not interfere with the free operation of the mines and that the government will not interfere with any arrangements made between the Westphalian industrialists and the French. This is on the understanding that if the coal syndicate furnishes the coal needed for reparations deliveries, the government undertakes no obligations in relation to the arrangements between the industrialists and the French regarding the proportion of coal which is delivered to France and that which is retained for sale or use by the industrialists.

Two Die in Food Rioting.

Food riots continued in several German cities today. In Wiesbaden and Hoechst, both in the occupied territory, disturbances began last night, resulting in the death of two and the wounding of several. The French commander declared martial law at Hoechst this morning.

At Leipsic several hundred unemployed attacked food shops. The police charged the crowd, dispersing them with their swords. Several were injured.

Following riots in Frankfort, all food shops were closed.

POINCARE CALLS FOCH

BY HENRY WALES.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
(Copyright: 1923: By The Chicago Tribune.)

PARIS, Oct. 13.—The news that the Reichstag had voted full powers to Chancellor Stresemann was flashed over the telephone from Berlin early this afternoon. Premier Poincare was told the result of the vote while attending the funeral of the American wife of the Italian ambassador, Sig. Avezzana.

Following the obsequies, Premier Poincare requested Marshal Foch to proceed to Quai d'Orsay with him, where they held a long conference concerning France's attitude towards Germany under dictatorship rule.

Meanwhile the reparations commission began to examine the celebrated "Belgian plan," drawn up in Brussels last summer by Belgian experts with the approval of Premier Theunis and Foreign Minister Jaspar. The French hitherto have declined to examine or discuss this plan pending the abandonment of the resistance in the Ruhr. It provides for the holding of various industries and other sources of revenue which the allies could accept as guarantees for Germany to pay reparations.

Lost Dusseldorf Stores.

DUSSELDORF, Oct. 13.—[By the Associated Press.]—Fifty or more stores were sacked of food and clothing in Dusseldorf during the day by unemployed and lawless elements, and the looting continued tonight almost unhindered, except by a few resolute, but quickly vanquished, store owners and shop keepers.

The French troops at the request of the city authorities took over protection of the public buildings, but otherwise adopted a strict "hands off" policy. The German population in general showed an apathetic attitude or found the scenes amusing, no one even trying to dissuade the looters from breaking open the stores and emptying them of merchandise.

As the success of the plundering became certain, the looters were well reinforced, and by afternoon the pillaging became more widespread and systematic.

Plundering is reported from Duisburg, Buer, Bochum, Essen, Cologne and a number of small towns, like Heustadt in the French area, where German police fired, wounding eleven. The situation, at Duisburg became more menacing with the complete shut down of thirteen large factories employing about 100,000 operatives.

Police Kill Woman.

COLOGNE, Oct. 13.—[By Associated Press.]—One woman died today from wounds alleged to have been inflicted by the police, who fired into a crowd of food rioters. The police say factory workers pelted them with hot coals and they were forced to use their firearms.

Peter B. Kyne Explains Why He Left Lloyd George

New York, Oct. 13.—Peter B. Kyne, the American novelist and friend of David Lloyd George, who accompanied the former British prime minister to Canada as advisor in plans for his tour of the United States, and who unexpectedly left the wartime premier's party, today announced he had done so because he half found he could be of no use to Mr. Lloyd George. He denied there had been any disagreement.

LLOYD GEORGE SEES CANADA OUTSTRIP U. S.

"Europe's Jobless Will Fill Prairies."

Winnipeg, Man., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—To 6,000 people in the largest rink in Winnipeg, David Lloyd George, former British prime minister, carried his message of gratitude to the prairie section of Canada for the sacrifice they made during the war for the British empire "without compulsion and of your own free will."

He spoke later in the night to 4,000 war veterans and other service club members in the board of trade auditorium.

Mr. Lloyd George dwelt on the happy relations existing between the United States and Canada along such a wide front and predicted that Canada would make greater strides than the United States had ever done, filling its prairies with the unemployed and distressed of Europe.

Europe is Arming."

"I see Europe arming and filling up with ammunition of the most devastating sort," Mr. Lloyd George said at conclusion of the address.

"I am afraid that unless something intervenes there may be in the world again a catastrophe, but it will not be like the last one, which was full of horror and devastation. That was nothing to what will happen in another war. Human ingenuity has been employed in the development and perfection of the machinery of destruction. The next war may well destroy civilization unless something or somebody does something. That is why I want the British empire strong.

"It is not because you do not appreciate it," he said, "but there are large numbers throughout the world who have not the slightest idea of what the empire did between 1914 and 1918."

Great Britain had sent 6,000,000 men and had spent £10,000,000,000. "Was it worth the price?" he asked. "Let some one tell me the price of liberty," he said, "and I can answer that question."

Canada Takes Place with Nations.

"The world had better know," declared the speaker amid applause, "that what the British empire has done once it can do again, and will do if again that freedom is imperiled."

He spoke of the work at the Versailles conference and the signing of the peace treaty. France, Italy, and the British signed as great nations—and who came next—Canada.

"In that gathering of nations Canada signed as an equal with every great nation on earth, and Sir Robert Borden, the premier, walked off with a certificate of nationhood signed by all the great nations."

A Great Welcome.

Through one of the biggest crowds ever turned out in the history of Winnipeg, two solid lines of surging, shouting enthusiasts who packed both sides of the street along the entire route of welcome, Mr. Lloyd George made his advent into Winnipeg this afternoon.

By the famous visitor's side, apparently as delighted with his reception as he, were his wife and daughter, Dame Margaret and Miss Megan Lloyd George. Safe to say a good portion of Winnipeg's tumultous greeting was meant for them.

Met by Officials.

Waiting to greet the visitor as he stepped from the train were Gov. Sir James Aikins, Premier Bracken, Mayor Farmer, Maj. Gen. Ketchen, representatives of war veterans clubs, and four Winnipeg Welsh societies.

The party proceeded to the city hall, where the visitor was made welcome by Mayor Farmer. Here the crowd outside was packed so densly that the police had a hard time making a path as he left the building.

Mr. Lloyd George leaves for Chicago Sunday afternoon.

CITY PREPARES BIG WELCOME FOR "WELSH WIZARD"

Lloyd George Will Arrive Tuesday.

The program planned by Chicago in connection with the rousing welcome the city will give David Lloyd George during the former English prime minister's two day visit, beginning at noon Tuesday, underwent several last minute changes last night.

Chief among the changes was the advancing of the date of the luncheon to be tendered the statesman by the Chicago Association of Commerce. This affair, originally planned for noon on Wednesday, will take place at 1 p. m. Tuesday. It will be held at the Hotel La Salle.

At the same time it became known that there is uncertainty as to whether Mr. Lloyd George will be able to attend the dinner announced for Wednesday evening in his honor by the Audit Bureau of Circulations. The dinner is an annual affair and will be held whether or not he attends.

May Visit Stockyards.

If agreeable to him, Mr. Lloyd George's entertainers plan to take him, his wife, and his daughter, Miss Megan, through the stockyards on Wednesday.

A record crowd is expected to pack the International amphitheater on Wednesday night, where Lloyd George is to speak. A special apparatus will be installed in order that the statesman's voice may carry throughout the big building.

Bris. Gen. Charles G. Dawes will preside at the Wednesday night meeting and make the introductory speech. Mr. Lloyd George's speech is expected to be his first "comprehensive public utterance in America."

To Be Met by Dever.

The Lloyd George party expects to reach St. Charles, Ill., at 7:37 Tuesday morning, whence it will proceed by motor to Mooseheart, where the statesman will address the Loyal Order of Moose at the "Campanile" and make an inspection trip about the large orphanage maintained by the order.

At noon Tuesday Mr. Lloyd George will be met at the Northwestern station, Chicago, by a committee headed by Mayor Dever, Brig. Gen. Dawes, and Bernard E. Sunny. Accompanied by a military escort, the premier's party will pass through the loop to the Drake hotel.

TWO WOMEN, MAN CAUSE A DEATH BY BLACKMAIL?

Police Hunting Plotters Against Mayor.

Irvington, N. J., Oct. 13.—Two women, one from New York and the other from New Jersey, and a man said to be a former politician, are being sought in connection with the suicide of Mayor Edward Folsom of Irvington, who took his life because he had seen his fortune pass into the hands of blackmailers who knew he once served a term in prison.

This announcement was made tonight by Assistant Prosecutor J. Victor D'Ajola, who was said to have been given the names of the alleged blackmailers by the former mayor's son.

While the search was on, Mrs. Folsom, the daughter of the rich man from whom Folsom stole, when he was a youth, so he could marry her, cried out for punishment of the blackmailers. There was one thing that baffled her, however—the disappearance of a letter her husband wrote two weeks before he took his life.

Mrs. Folsom has searched all the former mayor's effects without avail for the document which she believes will show in detail the acts of those who made her husband's life a parallel to that of Jean Valjean.

Mr. Folsom, who had built up a business and made many friends in the community to which he and his wife came after he was released from Auburn prison, was penniless when he died. His coal company was mortgaged for $35,000 and it was believed most of that money, and more, had been paid to the blackmailers.

FLIVVER FELLED, BUT BRAVE MAIL MAN CARRIES ON

Paul Kiviand of Wilmette and the man who brought the message to Garcia are made of the same stern stuff.

Mr. Kiviand's business is carrying Wilmette's special delivery letters. Yesterday his flivver lost its tail when an electric train of the North Shore line struck it. The gallant flivver sank to the Greenleaf avenue pavement and died. Mr. Kiviand and his mail pouch were sprawled beside it. Letters flew in all directions.

Sergt. Joseph Steffens and a band of policemen helped Mr. Kiviand retrieve the special delivery mail and urged him to have medical attention. But Mr. Kiviand, as has been said, bears the Garcia label. One withering look of scorn he directed toward the policemen, one compassionate glance at his defunct mount. Then down the road he scuttled to deliver the letters!

HEIR TO RICHES FOLLOWS SISTER INTO CABBY LIFE

New York, Oct. 13.—[Special.]—Francis O. French, eldest son of Amos Tuck French and Mrs. Leroy French, and cousin of William H. Vanderbilt, will start to work Monday as a hackmen.

Mr. French is a brother of the former Miss Julia French, who astonished Newport society in 1911 when she eloped with the family chauffeur, Handsome Jack Geraghty, son of a Newport cabman.

When Mr. French went to the cab association looking for a job, he frankly disclosed that he wanted employment at which he could most readily earn his bread and butter and provide shelter for himself until he could get back on his feet financially.

DUCK HUNTER DROWNS.

Muskegon, Mich., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—Harry Avery, 40, was drowned today when his duck boat capsized on Muskegon lake. The overturned boat was found at noon, but it was only tonight that the identity of the hunter was established.

BAVARIA SEEKS STERN MILITARY RULE IN GERMANY

Opposes Socialists in Government.

BY PAUL WILLIAMS.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
(Copyright: 1923: By The Chicago Tribune.)

MUNICH, Oct. 13.—Bavaria is resting on its arms while its nationalist leaders are closely watching developments in Saxony and Thuringia. What Bavaria will do largely depends on the action the federal government takes in those areas.

Even the conservatives among the Bavarian nationalists regarded the Stresemann cabinet as doomed. They expect it to survive another two weeks. In its place Bavaria hopes to see a directorate of all the parties, except the socialists and communists, each represented by a strong man.

This directorate, according to political discussions here, is to be responsible to a committee of twenty-five appointed by President Ebert, who would himself act as chairman of the board of governors of the new government to be organized on a business basis.

Would Bar All Socialists.

No socialists or radical members of the reichstag would sit in the committee of twenty-five, as it is the firm conviction of those supporting the plan that politically the reichstag no longer is representative of Germany. Its members were chosen in 1920, and even the socialists covertly admit that they have lost ground, particularly this year, through the general disgust at the economic conditions and the reawakening patriotic spirit, both due considerably to the occupation of the Ruhr.

The Bavarian members on the directorate would expect an immediate declaration of a military dictatorship, perhaps under the present commander of the reichswehr who would be responsible to the directorate.

The Bavarian directors would urge an ultimatum to the Saxon and Thuringen governments, Red governments to resign or else be put out forcibly.

Would Defy France.

Bavaria wants more firmness in the dealings with the French, some extremists asserting that if the French want reparations let them come and get them. Some regard the Ruhr as already lost to Germany, and it is surprising to find how many others are resigned to the separation of this wealthiest part of the country.

Many intelligent Bavarians deplore the divisions among the Germans and almost in the next breath say Bavaria can no longer bear the domination of the north and must have back its king. The wish for a federated monarchial state has never been stronger than now. Socialis mand communism are completely submerged within the Bavarian boundaries. The opposition here is mainly due to dissatisfaction with Berlin's policies, and there may be trouble some day unless the Bavarian ideas are given more consideration by Prussia.

The Bavarians are willing to march side by side with the Prussian nationalists. If there are serious quarrels within the rank and file of the various Bavarian nationalist organizations they all assert that they have too much in common to come to blows.

"RAINBO CHARMS"
Company of forty—Rainbo beauty chorus

"It is easily the most ambitious thing of its kind in town. Indeed, there is hardly a musical comedy in the standard theaters at the moment that could not with profit take a leaf from the book of Mr. Beck's way of staging an entertainment."
—Sheppard Butler, TRIBUNE.

"No cleaner, brighter, prettier entertainment is offered anywhere than at the Rainbo Room, in itself an architectural delight, handsomely fitted for its purpose."
—Margaret Mann Crollius, NEWS.

"From the first number to the 'Tweet Tweet' finale events joyful to eye and ear take place in such profusion that even the most eager must go away satisfied."
—JOURNAL.

"Fred Mann's Rainbo Room—the million-dollar one, you know—has come to be the smartest place of its kind in town. . . . 'Rainbo Charms' is similar to the Beck Revues, well mannered, but lively with the necessary contrasting variety."
—HERALD-EXAMINER.

"The Rainbo is something more than that most distinctive of American institutions, a cabaret. . . . It is more than a place to dine and dance. There is not a number on the bill that will bore you. The Rainbo long has been famous for the clothes its chorus wears."
—Sam Putnam, POST.

"All of which is by the way of saying that the production which opened the fall season at the Rainbo Room is as good as Fred Mann hopes you will think it is."

NOW THEY DISH OUT HOOTCH WITH FISH AND CANDY

Even Shoe Shine 'Parlor' Turns Speakeasy.

Thirty Chicagoans, scared away from their usual grog shops, soft drink parlors, and cabarets by police activities of the last few weeks, are buying their home with their shoe shines, with their halibut steaks at the fishmongers, and even at the cobbler's, where they take their old shoes to be resoled.

This condition was found to exist last night by police mopping up squads sent out to make the usual Saturday night cleanup. Unable to find a single wet spot among the saloons and soft drink parlors, the spongers were compelled to hose about in out of way places.

Find Saloons All Empty.

In fact, detective squads working under Chief Collins and Capt. Patrick Kelliher of the First precinct, were forced orders to dry up the favorite wet rendezvous of after the hour parties in the loop, were unable to obtain one drop of evidence.

Weary of entering deserted saloons, the squads from the South Clark street station began touring the streets with the result that three sidewalk vendors of moonshine were gathered in. One cobbler also was arrested in that district when the police were attracted to the queue of customers at his door.

The Cottage Grove avenues police arrested one fish dealer who was passing out moonshine with each purchase of herring and also a delicatessen proprietor who was presiding at a miniature bar back of his icebox. Two flats also were raided in that district.

Hooch With Shoe Shine.

Out in the Kensington district a shining parlor was raided and a quantity of moonshine seized, while over in the Maxwell street district John Silkie, proprietor of a candy store at 1357 Canalport avenue, was taken into custody when he was found to be selling rye of a sort to go with his rock candy.

Several saloonkeepers were arrested in the outlying districts and a raiding squad from the Grand station raided a 100 gallon still and 163 gallons of moonshine at 408 West 103d street. But the saloonkeepers and soft drink parlor owners were in the minority when the night's work was finished.

K. C. Backs Mayor.

Cheering Mayor Dever for fully five minutes following his declaration that he will carry on the war against crime and illicit and illegal saloons and soft drink shops, without compromise, over 2,000 Knights of Columbus pledged their support and evidenced their full approval of the mayor's tactics at the annual dinner in celebration of Columbus day of the La Salle assembly of fourth degree, Knights of Columbus last night in Hotel La Salle.

Mayor Dever declared that false issues during political campaigns were in a measure responsible for the apparent disrespect for law and order that has existed in Chicago.

Gets After Real Issue.

"The real issue, the crime so prevalent in Chicago—was never mentioned in the last mayoralty campaign, either by Mr. Leuder or myself," he said.

"It was only after taking office that this appalling situation faced me and while a great many people may not feel so kindly towards me, it is my intention to put an end to disrespect for law and order or have it put an end to me."

Among the other speakers were States Attorney Robert E. Crowe and Martin Conboy, president of the New York Bar association. John E. Maloney was toastmaster.

"When one ounce of liquor is found in the Friar's Inn or any other loop cabaret or restaurant the owner, no matter how powerful his political influence or sponsors may be, had better buy a set of new, shiny padlocks for his doors, because they are going to be closed for a long, long time," declared Chief Collins yesterday.

Four Saloonmen Freed.

Four saloonkeepers, arrested Friday night by the New City police, were released yesterday in Englewood court when Judge Joseph Burke was informed that the raids on their places were made without search warrants.

"Mike de Pike" Heitler, alleged silent partner of Philip Kimmel, owner of the Burr Oak hotel, in Blue Island, was present when Sheriff Hoffman and a squad raided the hotel last night and arrested five women and five men.

SEEK TO DEPORT SON OF BARON, HERE FOR YEARS

Passport Slip May Cost Chicago Home.

Stephan von Lorthy, son of a former Hungarian baron, and Frederick Baker, both Chicago business men, are being held under $1,000 bonds each to face deportation proceedings on Oct. 26 because they failed to comply with the law requiring a visa of their passports when they slipped into the United States from Canada through Detroit several years ago.

STEPHEN VON LORTHY.

The men were arrested Friday night on a warrant issued by Immigration Commissioner Howard D. Ebey, charging illegal entrance into this country, after they had applied for first citizenship papers.

Both men are 29 years old. Von Lorthy's wife, daughter of a naturalized Russian, whom he married after coming to Chicago, and his child are not subject to the proceedings, and should he be deported, he faces the problem of being separated from them or taking them to a strange country.

Father Came Here in 1915.

Von Lorthy's father, Stephan J. von Lorthy, came to Chicago in 1915, and was one of the founders of the United Film company, in which he is now a director. Both he and his son are said to have large holdings in estates in Hungary.

The son is said to have served as an officer in the Hungarian army during the war, and at its close went to Belgium, where he met Baker. Both men obtained passports to Canada, but failed to have these passports vised again when they came to the United States.

Enters Tire Business.

Baker became a partner in the W. & B. tire store at 2137 South Wabash avenue. Von Lorthy, who lives with his family at 4631 South Michigan avenue, engaged in the film business with his father.

State Senator Adolph Marks has been retained as attorney by both men to represent them at the proceedings. Both admit failure to comply with the law, but will ask for leniency on the grounds that they have proved themselves good citizens by engaging successfully in business, and that they have signified their good intentions by applying for naturalization papers.

Foreign War Veterans Give U. S. Flag to Belgian Queen

BRUSSELS, Oct. 13.—Mrs. Charles Augustine Robinson of New York today presented to Queen Elizabeth a silk American flag in the name of S. S. Antilles Post No. 146, Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Praise Dever Drive.

William Gibbs McAdoo and William Jennings Bryan, Democratic leaders, and the former a possible candidate for President, stopped off in Chicago for a short time yesterday. Both were on their way east.

Mr. McAdoo was accompanied by Mrs. McAdoo, the former Eleanor Wilson, daughter of ex-President Wilson, and their daughters, Ellen and Mary. He was uncommunicative on political matters further than to say that his visit here was without political significance. So far as was known he was in touch with none of his party leaders in Chicago except Mayor Dever, to whom he telephoned from the Blackstone hotel, commending him for his prohibition enforcement campaign and urging him to keep it up. "The nation should do likewise," he said.

Mr. Bryan called on the mayor and also praised his efforts to "mop up" the city. He told the mayor that his drive was attracting national attention.

LITTLE LEFT TO IMAGINATION BY LATEST IN SKIRTS

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

PARIS, Oct. 13.—[Tribune Radio.]—Vells made their reappearance this afternoon for the first time since the war at the autumn opening of the Auteuil races. Since the armistice vells have been discarded, as they are reminders of mourning, but they have been revived with the introduction of new quaint shaped hats, which the modistes are launching to replace the bell shaped "cloche" hats which have been the vogue for three or four years.

Skirts are shorter than they were last spring, with startling slits and scantily draped effects, which, open from the hem to the waistline with every step, revealing limbs and lingerie.

American style flat heeled slippers failed to gain a footing in the autumn styles, even the Yankee girls wearing graceful, high heeled, cutaway sandals.

Red has supplanted the spring favorite, green, as the popular color for trimmings for gowns, hats, cloaks, gloves and shoes.

"I will never make another picture there if I can help it," he told THE TRIBUNE today on arriving at Paris.

The only reason he proffered was that he liked Europe better.

"I suppose I might have to go back to America once or twice to direct, but I intend to do all my work abroad and remain here permanently."

He is now en route to Egypt, where he will film "The Arab" with an American company, later returning to Paris for the finishing touches.

EUROPE DUMPS RIFFRAFF IN U. S., IS SOLON'S VIEW

Washington, D. C., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—"The governments of Europe are endeavoring to hold their really desirable citizens at home and are striving to unload on the United States the great mass of depraved and degenerates with which their cities are crowded.

In this declaration Representative James B. Aswell [Dem., La.], summarized his observations on a recent extensive trip through Europe with Secretary of Labor Davis. Mr. Aswell was the only member of congress on this trip. Because of indescribable conditions abroad as he observed them, Representative Aswell, at the coming session of congress, will advocate further restriction of immigration, and if the flood cannot be checked entirely he will urge congress to make immigration selective, barring all but desirable classes.

DEMON RUM RUNS SAME OLD CYCLE, PILGRIMS LEARN

Booze Whirligig Back at Starting Point.

BY RICHARD HENRY LITTLE.

It looked as if the circle was broken at last. Mortimer and I had been to three saloons and five soft drink parlors where only a short two weeks ago Mortimer had been able to purchase red liquor. Yesterday Mortimer begged in vain. I wish it distinctly and thoroughly understood that I did not wish red liquor. There is a law against purchasing same. But I was! O! so anxious to know if it were still sold.

I went straight to Mortimer. If anybody could tell me whether there were any places in Chicago which still sold fire water that man was Mortimer! He had been out of town for a month, but he scoffed at the story that no longer might one obtain fire water in Chicago.

Mortimer Leads the Way.

"Pooh!" said Mortimer. "Let us recall the cheery words of Shakespeare: 'When one door is closed another is open.' This thing runs in cycles. The country went bone dry and up sprang a full crop of bootleggers. The Volstead sleuths chased the bootleggers and so the saloons came back, then the soft drink parlors. Next we had real beer; yes, sir, wholesome beer at a moderate price, so we took to beer instead of hootch. Then came the war on beer and back came hootch, the saloon, the drug store, and the soft drink parlor. We have had a few rebuffs, but I will show you saloons et cetera that stand like the rock of Gibraltar. Walk this way, please!"

We went. We walked into the first place guaranteed by Mortimer. We were most casual. One would have thought we were naught but simple sheep herders from Australia. We passed citizens eating red hots and custard pie and drinking coffee. Mortimer thought we had better eat some red hots and drink some coffee. It would look more natural.

Cyril the Life Saver—Not.

Then we drifted down around the end of the bar. Mortimer confidently pulled open an office door and we walked right in. He addressed the sad looking man who sat there, with great cheeriness. If I would say he called him Jim or Tom or Bill it would make trouble for all soft drink proprietors known as Jim or Tom or Bill. We will conceal the name.

"Hello, Cyril," said Mortimer gaily. Understand that the publican's name was not Cyril. Cyril is the most unlikely name I can think of for a man who defied the laws of his country. "Hello, Cyril," said Mortimer, "how's tricks?"

Cyril said that tricks were very bad.

"You know me, Cyril," said Mortimer. "Get us a couple of little drinks."

"Absolutely nothing doing," said Cyril, "not if you gave me a diamond ring. There's not a drop on the place. We are absolutely and positively dried up."

Mortimer begged and coaxed, but Cyril sat shaking his head. "I never thought I would live to see this day," said he, "but it's come."

Plumbing an Oasis.

We went to another place that Mortimer knew.

"When everybody else had to quit," said he, "this joint was selling it fluently. They've got a triple jointed pull—federal, state and city. They pay out a lot of protection money and they pay it to the right people. As far as these boys are concerned the prohibition act only applies to San Salvador and Porto Rico."

We entered and Mortimer said, "Percy, I want to speak to you." Understand, the man's name wasn't Percy. But you have to be careful these days.

Percy shook his head mournfully.

"Why," said Mortimer, "you have always let me have a drink. You're not going back on a friend, are you?"

"We're through," said Percy, "all done."

"That's all right," said Mortimer. "I know the way to the coal cellar. Slip us a couple down there."

"I couldn't sell or give or lend you a drink of anything with alcohol in it if you went on the roof," said Percy.

We bade Percy good day.

The End of a Perfect Day.

Then Mortimer led the way to a drug store where he had always been able to get a pint. On prescription, of course, but the kindly druggist wrote the prescriptions himself. The front door was padlocked. The drug store had been closed by the police.

Mortimer was dazed.

"Great Scott!" he gasped. "I believe the country's gone dry."

We went back and sat down in Mortimer's office. The telephone bell jingled. Mortimer took the receiver down and listened. His face gleamed with rapture.

"Come right over," he said.

In ten minutes a gentleman entered with a suitcase. He locked the door behind him and opening the suitcase took out two bottles.

"It's pre-war stuff," he said simply.

"The bootleggers are in the saddle again," shouted Mortimer exultantly.

"The circle is complete."

FOR 3 LEAGUES OF NATIONS

COUNT ALBERT APPONYI.

APPONYI BLAMES HUNGARY RUIN ON VERSAILLES PACT

Count Albert Apponyi, who served in the Hungarian parliament for forty years, bitterly criticized the treaty of Versailles last night as the instrument which has ruined Hungary culturally and politically.

Speaking before a large audience at the Evanston University club, he declared that his native country is now infinitely worse off than it was directly after the close of the war. Its famous universities are closed, its scientific men are unable to continue their research, and the country which once had 18,000,000 citizens now has only 8,000,000, he pointed out.

Blames It All on Treaty.

All of which, the count said, is due to the terms of a treaty which partitioned Hungary, and gave parts of it to Roumania and Croatia and other nations of southeastern Europe.

"Our culture is retrogressing," said Count Apponyi. "The best part of intellectual Hungary has been turned over to Roumania, and because the latter nation was under the control of the Turks 200 years longer than was Hungary, Roumania's culture is now 200 years behind ours.

"Think what you want about Germany and Hungary, but you will have to admit that we had an advanced culture before the war. Now we are in intellectual bondage. Our men of science cannot get instruments with which to carry on their work, and they cannot get paper for printing the results of what they have already found out. Our famous universities have been shut down by the Roumanians.

Treaty in Bad Way, He Says.

"The peace treaty is now in a desperate condition. It is sustained only by actual violence or by political violence. There is bound to be a change and Hungary must be restored. My country's traditions are stronger than the various races which composed it."

Count Apponyi was heckled at one period in his talk by a man who objected to his praise of Hungary. I was several minutes before the chairman, Dean John H. Wigmore of the Northwestern university law school and other members of the club were able to silence the man.

"I'M NO HOUDINI," BOYLE, REPORTED FREE, DECLARES

Michael J. Boyle, the Chicago labor leader, is sure he was in the Lake county jail at Waukegan all Friday night and yesterday morning, serving his sentence for contempt of court in connection with the Small jury bribery case. He said so yesterday.

Official doubt arose and Boyle was questioned when an automobile bearing a license issued to him was found abandoned in front of 33 West Monroe street yesterday morning.

"It's the bunk," declared Boyle, emulating the colorful speech of his co-labor leader, "Big Tim" Murphy, now in Leavenworth. I ain't no Houdini. The car belongs to the International Union of Electrical Workers. Everybody uses it. I don't know who had it out last night, but I know I wasn't on no joy ride."

U. S. MOVES ITS WHISKY; NOT A DROP ESCAPES

Washington, D. C., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—The government has removed 250,000 barrels of whisky from private warehouses to new concentration warehouses designated by the internal revenue commissioner without losing a single gallon by theft.

The work of concentrating remaining stocks of good whisky in bond is proceeding rapidly. Officials said that by the end of the fiscal year the entire volume of 40,000,000 gallons will have been transported to the new warehouses. One-third of the stocks has been moved thus far.

COUNTY NEED OF SPACE REVIVES BUILDING TALK

Crime Courts Jammed; Jail "Disgrace."

BY OSCAR HEWITT.

The county government needs more housing facilities.

The recorder's office is so crowded it is hampered in the transaction of public business and is compelled to make employés work in vault space.

The city fire prevention bureau has recently commented upon the Criminal court building as follows:

"Why fire has not occurred in this building is strange. The setting is all arranged and is as perfect as if it were intended for a quick fire." While these defects are being remedied, the building is inadequate for all the courts which at times must be conducted. The vault space allotted to the clerk of the Criminal court is too small and ill arranged and, if designing outsiders are permitted inside, it invites tampering with public records. This has been done under previous administrations.

Jail Branded as Disgrace.

For years the jail has been called a disgrace by one grand jury after another. These opinions are among the most vigorous in local public documents.

Chief Justice John R. Caverly of the Criminal court estimates that the city and the county could easily save $200,000 a year if they would cooperate in building a structure to house all courts and other county activities dealing with crime. This saving the judge proposes to effect by the elimination of jobs now necessary because the administration of justice is scattered over a large and congested area. One after another the judge recited more than 100 jobs which a new and adequate structure should eliminate. With detailed study he believes he could make the saving $250,000. At the same time he asserted that the administration of justice could be speeded up and more satisfactory results obtained.

The judge has had a long experience in public office and does not argue that the city and county would save the large rents now being paid for leased private quarters. He reckons that the maintenance of the proposed structure would about equal the present rents.

Wait Popular Demand.

President Cermak and a majority of the commissioners who were interviewed said yesterday that the county should erect a large new building. But they are not inclined to start at once. They apparently desire to await a popular demand for action. They pointed to the fact that three times the voters have refused to vote a bond issue for a new jail. Former county boards were partly responsible for the attitude of the electorate. On one occasion no definite plan was presented. The tax spenders said to the taxpayers: "Vote the money and we will decide later upon the plan for spending it."

At another time the voters asked where the jail was to be located. The reply was not satisfactory and the voters vetoed the proposed bond issue. The third time the plans were ready and the present site was offered, but certain critics wished another design for the structure. In all three cases the public was given only a short time before election to become informed and arrive at an opinion.

"Sell Both, Start Over."

While the subject is again on the table for discussion, no program has been worked out. Probably the newest idea was that of one of the commissioners who suggested that the present Criminal court building and jail be sold and a new site and building be acquired with the proceeds. Another commissioner pointed out that title to part of the present site is vested in the city and control by the county is contingent upon a continuance of its present use.

But no effort has been made to ascertain whether the city government would consent to a sale.

The title to the ground on which the present city hall stands rests in the county. It is altogether possible that the city officials, in order to acquire title, would transfer the city's interest in the present Criminal court and jail site to the county. No one knows what can be done, because no one has attempted to negotiate.

City Also Seeks Building.

Another reason why the city might negotiate is its desire for a police and Municipal court building, about which it has been talking for several years. If the county would erect a building not only sufficient for its own needs, but also adequate and adapted to the needs of the city, the municipal government might listen, but no one has spoken to the city. Yet both city and county officials have chatted with newspaper reporters about such a plan.

No bond issue for a building will be submitted to the voters at the election next month. The project has not reached the point of formal discussion, to say nothing of a decision.

STUDENTS EXPELLED ON ODD CHARGE

SCHOOL HEADS STUDY CASES OF EXPELLED BOYS

"Pass Buck" on Grid Game Charges.

Interest remained at fever heat in Des Plaines yesterday over the cases of the three youths who were expelled from the high school last week by Principal Charles Hamel on the charge, considerd unique in the history of amateur athletics, of "laying down" in a football game with Lane Tech last Saturday.

After a three hours' discussion by trustees of the school Friday night, at which the fathers of Roland and Amasa Kennicott and Montgomery Hall pleaded that their sons should not be deprived of their schooling simply because Coach Glenn Fisher did not like their way of playing football, the board "passed the buck" to Prof. Hamel.

Hamel Gets "Upstage."

Yesterday Prof. Hamel was supposed to be considering whether he would reinstate the boys, but when asked if he had an announcement to make, his reply was:

"Now I think that's too small a matter to be worrying about." Then the professor hung up the telephone receiver.

"It may be a small matter to Prof. Hamel, but not to me or to Mr. Hall," declared Ransom Kennicott, chief forester for the forest preserve district and father of the Kennicott boys. "My sons are not getting a square deal. In the first place, they did not lie down in that game. I am considering some kind of action against somebody, but am not decided yet."

Condemns the Expulsion.

Principal Hamel's action in expelling the boys was condemned by Nelson Henry Norgren, former football star and assistant athletic director at the University of Chicago.

"These boys should have been retained in school and in the football squad and given hard practice until they became efficient," said Norgren. "It was entirely wrong to expel them."

WOMAN ROPED TO PIER TOOK LIFE TO "END DRUDGERY"

Miss Anna A. King, 45 years old, school teacher, botanist, and governess, recently gave up her position rather than expose the children she taught to the dangers of consumption. She wasn't able to obtain another position. Her cough grew worse.

On Friday her body was found floating in the lake and roped to a Hubbard Woods pier.

A coroner's jury, following an inquest conducted yesterday by Deputy Coroner John Thumm in Hebblewaite's undertaking rooms in Evanston, returned a verdict of suicide.

Indications that Miss King had contemplated ending her life were given in a letter to Miss Erna Wellman of 1452 Southport avenue and in a note crumpled into a small bottle found on the pier.

Note in Bottle Clears Deed.

The note in the bottle read, in part: "My death is voluntary. There has been no foul play. Newspaper publicity is not desired."

Miss Wellman read to the jury the letter she received on Friday afternoon. It directed her to cremate Miss King's body and have the ashes placed in a gray urn.

"What does it matter," the letter asked, "if a person goes crazy? I have a bad cough that has been bothering me for a long time. Why should I go on with the drudgery of this world? Of course people always talk so when any one breaks the conventions, but what do I care for them?

"I am going this afternoon for a hike through the woods near Highland Park. Last week I went to the dunes and had a lovely time. Nature is so beautiful at this time of year."

After directing her friend to use savings in an Oak Park bank for her burial Miss King wrote that her body would be found "on the beach" somewhere in the vicinity of Highland Park.

Authority on Botany.

Prof. C. E. Linebarger of 1101 Pratt boulevard said Miss King had worked in his family occasionally for the last five years as a governess. Last Tuesday, he said, she had visited the Linebarger home to return a book.

"Miss King was an unusual type of woman," he added, "and was well educated. She was an authority on botany and seven years ago held an exhibit of rare ferns in the Field museum."

COOLIDGE ISN'T GOING TO PASS UP 1924 PRIZE

To Bid for Nomination in Message to Congress.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—President Coolidge is going to make a striking and carefully and forcefully sustained bid for the Republican nomination to succeed himself, according to intimates who have gained an inkling of the course the new executive has embarked upon.

Those persons who believe or have been told that the President is a colorless character and incompetent in dealing with affairs of national and international scope, those persons who are expecting or hoping he will prove a failure and thereby open the way to rival candidacies for the nomination, are destined to receive the outstanding surprise of their lives when the first native New England Yankee in the White House since Chester A. Arthur cuts loose and goes after the big prize.

To Make First Bid in Message.

The case of the President for the nomination will be presented in his message to congress the first week of December and in a series of formal addresses which he will deliver on topics of major interest between that time and the meeting of the convention in June, as well as in numerous speeches of cabinet members and others who will stand forth as champions of Mr. Coolidge in the party councils.

As thus set forth in the written and spoken word, the qualifications of the President for a four year term in the office to which he was unexpectedly called are to be further illuminated by his administrative acts and his attitude in dealing with a congress in which radical Republicans, jealous Republican rivals, and Democrats on the lookout for political capital will constitute at times an obstruction and always an embarrassment to an executive seeking advancement of his legislative program.

To Urge Many Reforms.

The message to congress will be an arresting document. I am assured—an address recommending legislation to effect numerous reforms and outlining views on the theory and philosophy of government which admirers of the President are confident will take the country by storm and dishearten potential rivals for the nomination. Mr. Coolidge, it is stated, is already at work upon rough drafts of various portions of this state paper.

The President's views on questions relating to railroads, agriculture, taxes, prohibition, departmental reorganization, and retrenchment and numerous other matters will be disclosed or indicated definitely for the first time in the message. COOLIDGE ISN'T GOING TO PASS UP 1924 PRIZE

To Bid for Nomination in Message to Congress.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—President Coolidge is going to make a striking and carefully and forcefully sustained bid for the Republican nomination to succeed himself, according to intimates who have picked up inkling of the course the chief executive has embarked upon.

Those persons who believe or have been told that the President is a colorless character and incompetent in dealing with affairs of national and international scope, those persons who are expecting or hoping he will prove a failure and thereby open the way to rival candidacies for the nomination, are destined to receive the outstanding surprise of their lives when the first native New England Yankee in the White House since Chester A. Arthur cuts loose and goes after the big prize.

To Make First Bid in Message.

The case of the President for the nomination will be presented in his message to congress the first week of December and in a series of formal addresses which he will deliver on topics of major interest between that time and the meeting of the convention in June, as well as in numerous speeches of cabinet members and others who will stand forth as champions of Mr. Coolidge in the party councils.

As thus set forth in the written and spoken word, the qualifications of the President for a four year term in the office to which he was unexpectedly called are to be further illuminated by his administrative acts and his attitude in dealing with a congress in which radical Republicans, jealous Republican rivals, and Democrats on the lookout for political capital will constitute at times an obstruction and always an embarrassment to an executive seeking advancement of his legislative program.

To Urge Many Reforms.

The message to congress will be an arresting document. I am assured —an address recommending legislation to effect numerous reforms and outlining views on the theory and philosophy of government which admirers of the President are confident will take the country by storm and dishearten potential rivals for the nomination. Mr. Coolidge, it is stated, is already at work upon rough drafts of various portions of this state paper.

The President's views on questions relating to railroads, agriculture, taxes, prohibition, departmental reorganization and retrenchment and numerous other matters will be disclosed or indicated definitely for the first time in the message. Mr. Coolidge, like Presidents Wilson and Harding, will read the address to the houses of congress in joint session. The occasion will not be without aspects of the dramatic, for the President has made it known that his views on questions of the hour will not be disclosed until he delivers them to congress.

May Speak in Chicago.

Having reported to congress, in accord with the requirements of the constitution, the President will deem himself at liberty to accept invitations to speak on matters of public interest in various parts of the country. It is understood, however, that Mr. Coolidge will observe great restraint in this particular, that he will not venture far from Washington and that he probably will not deliver more than half a dozen extended addresses between December and the meeting of the convention in June. Fred Upham and other Coolidge boomers in the middle west have reason to believe that the President can be induced to go as far west as Chicago for one of these speeches.

Any one who knows Mr. Coolidge realizes how he is striving to do his duty in a position of extreme difficulty, to demonstrate to the people that he is an able executive and to his party that he is worthy of the confidence reposed in him when he was nominated for vice president.

Of course, the President desires, and keenly desires, the nomination. He does not deny it to any one. He has confessed it to his intimates. But no one justifiably can say, to my knowledge, that he has done aught since he entered the White House which would advance his chances of nomination but which he would have not done were he ineligible to the honor. President Hayes uttered a maxim, the truth of which every president has realized, when he said that "he serves his party best who serves the country best." Likewise, he serves best his ambition to party honor who serves the country best. President Coolidge is proceeding on that theory.

A SHORT-LIVED ROMANCE

Grand Jury Will Sift Child Attack Charges

Charges of attacking two children against Elemer Hyde, 43 years old, 2451 North Artesian avenue, were ordered laid before the grand jury yesterday. Harry Cash and his wife, 2157 Lewis street, parents of the children, were recently fined for contributing to their children's delinquency. Hyde, it is charged, was one of those whom the parents allowed to annoy the little girls.

Drinking "Moon" in Auto Costs Girl Fine of $1

Sitting in an automobile and drinking moonshine cost Miss Gladys Seaburg, 19 years old, 743 North Dearborn street, John Davico, 1145 North Wells street, and Richard McLain, 50 West Huron street, fines of $1 each.

DEMOCRATS OF DANVILLE PUT UP GOVERNOR RACER

Boost Editor Meeks to Head State Ticket.

BY FRANK BUTZOW.

Vermilion county Democrats are busy boosting the gubernatorial stock of their "favorite son" candidate, James A. Meeks of Danville. They say Mr. Meeks is a serious contender for the Democratic nomination. James H. Elliott, chairman of the Vermilion county Democratic committee, is leading the movement.

Mr. Meeks is a lawyer and farmer and president of the Press Publishing company, publishers of the Danville Press, a Democratic newspaper. He was a delegate to the Democratic national convention at San Francisco in 1920 and represented Illinois on the committee that officially notified James M. Cox of his nomination.

Talk of Mid-Winter Meeting.

With nearly a dozen Democrats either avowed candidates or in a receptive mood towards the gubernatorial nomination, party leaders generally are "sitting tight" for the time being. There is still talk of a mid-winter convention of Democrats to sound out sentiment and perhaps select a candidate upon whom most elements of the party can unite.

C. B. Thomas of East St. Louis, State Representative Lee O'Neill Browne of Ottawa, ex-Mayor C. M. Borchers of Decatur, Frank T. O'Hair of Paris, James H. ["High Heels"] Kirby of Petersburg, and Mr. Meeks are among the early entries. Then there is a group of prominent Democrats considered as potential candidates at least. This includes Justice Floyd E. Thompson of the Supreme court, Circuit Judge Norman L. Jones of Carrollton, Bruce Campbell of East St. Louis, State Representative John P. Devine of Dixon, and Mayor Dever of Chicago.

Speak at Statue Unveilings.

Judge Jones will deliver an address on "John M. Palmer" at Springfield Tuesday, when the new statues of former Govs. John M. Palmer and Richard Yates on the capitol grounds are dedicated. Congressman Richard Yates, himself a former governor, will deliver the address when the statue of his father, "Illinois' war governor," is unveiled.

The Yates statue will be unveiled by Dorothy Yates, granddaughter and daughter of Richard Yates I. and Richard Yates II. respectively. The Palmer statue will be unveiled by Gov. Palmer's granddaughter, Margaret Palmer Jayne.

Mr. Kirby of "high heels" fame has asked to be billed as speaker tomorrow before the Ragen club, 5142 South Halsted street. He wants to explain how he stands on prohibition and his "Chicago platform."

Portuguese Monarchists Plan to Down Republic

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

LISBON, Oct. 13.—[Tribune Radio.]—A coup to restore a monarchy in Portugal is being actively organized, according to the monarchists themselves. It is planned to put Don Duarte, 16 year old grandson of Don Miguel, and a member of the Braganza family, upon the throne from which King Manuel was chased thirteen years ago. The organization is under the direction of Father Mariotte, a priest and writer, who just has returned to Portugal from Paris. The monarchists are banded in a sort of Fascisti nationalist organization to support the movement.

SURFACE LINES ADD MORE CARS ON FIVE ROUTES

Madison Street Service to Be Improved.

Announcement of more and better service for street car straphangers was made yesterday by surface lines officials. Forty-two additional round trips on heavy traffic routes are included in the new schedules, which become effective this morning at 6 o'clock and provide for the use of trailer trains on West Madison street.

In addition to the new trailers nineteen cars will be added to the Madison street service. Five more are assigned to Harrison street, seven to Van Buren street, nine to Crawford avenue, and two to the Clark-Wentworth avenue through route.

Mayor's Message Wednesday.

No important diversion from policies expressed in his last message to the council is expected in the new traction message to be read by Mayor Dever to the aldermen at their meeting next Wednesday. It was said the message will formally notify the aldermen that the traction companies' officials have signified their willingness to sell their properties to the city, and that he has advised the local transportation committee to enter into negotiations immediately.

Favors Taking the $8,000,000.

It is also believed he will recommend acceptance of the city's $8,000,000 share of the companies' net profits, which were refused by the Thompson administration.

Construction of a comprehensive subway system, it also was said, is included in the mayor's program as a later phase of solution of the traction problem.

Father-in-Law Held for Slaying of Deserter

Nicholas Conforti of 3753 South Washtenaw avenue, father-in-law of Angelo de Angelo, whom he mortally wounded last Tuesday, was held to the grand jury yesterday on a murder charge. DeAngelo's wife said her husband had deserted her. On Tuesday he attempted to take his car from the Conforti garage. Conforti had words with him and finally shot him.

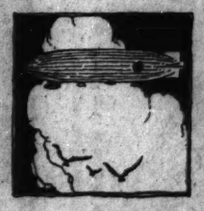
"The Man of Dreams"
AS the Shadows gather round the enchanted Isle of Imagery, Humanity Nods and Blinks and Dreams.
The Tyrant-Babe nightly goes abroad, and wanders all alone in the Land of Nod, beside the Streams and up the Mountain-Sides of Dreams.

Fanciful and fair, the Maiden in her Teens awaits the coming of her gallant Prince, and pictures herself the dainty Cinderella in the Drama of Dreams.
The Little Boy Blue of yesteryear dreams of Sinbads and Dick Deadeyes, as the Stars look down upon him and Glitter and Wink in the Night.
And so, from the Cradle to the Grave, Imagination wings its flight—and the World goes on and ever on a-Dreaming.
HOMER gave us the Iliad, Virgil the Aeneid, Shakspere the classics of all time. Byron, Milton, Pope, Emerson, Chaucer, Tennyson, Whittier, Longfellow—each bequeathed to Posterity a Legacy Rich in Dreams.
Edison still lives, and Dreams. The Light that floods millions of homes is but one of this Great Inventor's contributions to Modern Science.
Henry Ford, genial soul and dreamer of dreams, commercialized the Automobile, and in doing so put an everlasting "kick" in the World's Work.
Dream-ships penetrate the Milky Way, and no longer can the Birds of the Air boast of Flying Supremacy.


Modern Skyscrapers dot the Streets and Boulevards of our greater American cities as constant reminders of the Efficacy of Dreams.
Even the amiable Mr. Gilchrist dreams wonderful dreams of a World Democracy and the Universal Brotherhood of Man. Will his dreams come true? Mr. Channing Pollock says nay. At least not until the gods create a race of men who think alike, act alike, and worship under the same vine and fig-tree.
INDEED, the Dreamer of Today is the Sky-Rider of Tomorrow—the Man of Vision, who Sees Far and Shoots Straight. The Builder of Cities, not Castles in the Air—the Man of Action, Ambition and Achievement—the Doer of Deeds, and Civilization's one best bet. If it were not for the Dreamer, Progress would ride, not in a Golden Chariot, but in an old-fashioned One-Hoss Shay. So, here's to the Man of Dreams.

McCRAY'S BANK SINKS BENEATH LOAD OF PAPER

Kentland Institution Will Come Back, Claim.

BY DONALD EWING.

Kentland, Ind., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—The Discount and Deposit State bank, which recently ousted Gov. Warren T. McCray as its president because of the McCray paper he placed in it, closed its doors today.

On the front door the board of directors posted a statement, in which they said:

"The continued and incessant notoriety, through the press and generally, reflecting on this bank, has reduced the funds of this bank. The possible complications suggested by public statements has made it difficult to get additional cash and we have been forced to close, contemplating reorganization or liquidation. We believe the bank to be solvent."

State Withdraws Funds.

The bank's difficulties became acute when State Treasurer Ora Davies withdrew about $60,000 in state funds. Some depositors had previously taken their money out of the bank and others followed when they heard of the action of the state treasurer. The bank needed currency immediately and that was hard to get.

Thomas Barr, deputy bank examiner, came here when informed that the directors had voted to close. He is expected to make a public statement by Monday evening.

The total assets of the bank were given today as $569,245 and the liabilities, deposits and bills payable, total $428,177.

Judge William Darroch, who succeeded Gov. McCray as president, said that the directors desire to get new interests in the bank.

Old Associations "Odious."

"We want to get away from the odium of old associations and possible complications which may come up," he went on. "The possible complications resulting from the known acts of Warren T. McCray, former head of the bank, and the possibilities of acts unknown at present, make it particularly unsafe to operate on known assets and known liabilities of the bank."

This is the bank which applied the brakes to the governor, resulting in his financial tumble. Early in the year the governor is understood to have had about $155,000 worth of paper in his bank. These notes were increased and the state board of agriculture was induced to deposit $150,000 of its funds in the bank. In August the directors of the bank gave orders that no more of Gov. McCray's paper was to be taken.

Then the governor appealed to former Gov. Goodrich and he raised $350,000 to straighten up McCray's affairs in the Discount and Deposit bank. When that process was over about $50,000 worth of the McCray paper, said to be among the best, still remained in the bank. This amount has been published in at least four papers and no denial of this amount.

James W. Noel of Indianapolis, the governor's attorney, told THE TRIBUNE representative over the long distance phone that the bank now holds McCray notes for $50,000 and that they presumably are "the best of those given it by the governor."

The action of the Discount and Deposit bank caused the Kent State bank, also of Kentland, to rush in large sums of cash from LaFayette, Ind., in anticipation of a run, but there were no unusual withdrawals.

Founded by Ade's Father.

The story of the Discount and Deposit bank is one of small town romance and loyalty turned into tragedy. It was founded in 1873 by John Ade, father of George Ade, and Greenberry W. McCray, the governor's father. In 1907 there was a reorganization, in which Ade dropped out and the bank became a state institution.

Gov. McCray became president and director in 1916, his associates on the board being Judge Darroch, Richard Carton, Willis Fitzpatrick, W. S. Harrison, C. N. Davis, J. B. Dodson, George Hart, and Amos Morris—all oldtimers in Kentland.

Kentland gave the bank its full support, priding itself on the handsome concrete building erected on the small town's main street, which, with McCray's $15,000 home, was strongly in contrast with the usual frame structures and cottages.

McCray Had No Restraint.

McCray, as the bank's president, reputedly the richest man in Kentland—his home town—and as governor of the state, had free rein.

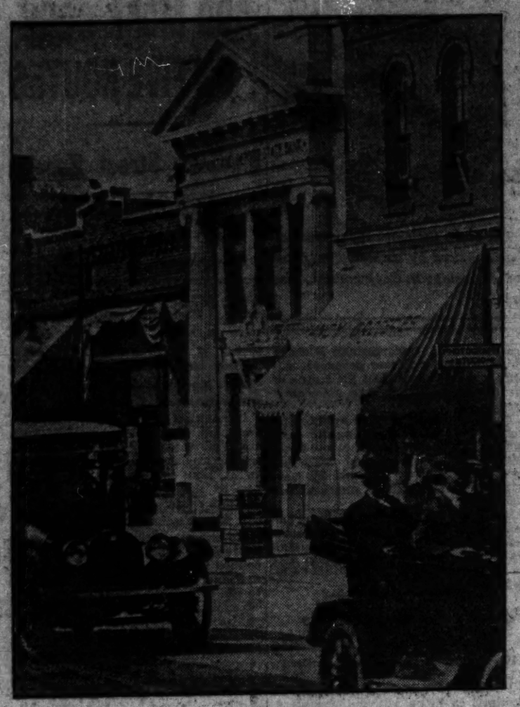
Two more suits by banks seeking to recover money given McCray on notes were filed here today by Hume L. Sammons, attorney for the suing institutions. The Delaware County National bank of Muncie wants to get back $10,000, while the Grandview bank seeks $3,500.

In the list of holders of McCray notes recently published was the Union State bank of Breman. This bank has not had any McCray papers in a year.

FOUND HANGING IN BARN.

The body of Carl Anderson, a farmer at Malleont, Ill., was found hanging from a rafter in the loft of his barn last night.

McCRAY'S OLD BANK IS CLOSED



Discount and Deposit State bank of Kentland, Ind., which closed yesterday for reorganization, apparently as a result of notes given it by Gov. Warren T. McCray, who recently was ousted as its president when it was found he had given his own institution paper of doubtful value.

Boys' Club Work Theme of Neighborhood Club

Robert D. Klees of 178 North Lombard avenue, Oak Park, managing director of the Union League Boys' club of Chicago, will be the principal speaker next Thursday evening at the opening meeting of the Neighborhood club of River Forest. A program will be given by boy members of the club. Mr. Klees is a graduate of Johns Hopkins university and has headed similar work in Baltimore and Philadelphia. The aim of the Union League Boys' club is to give boys of small means and living in congested districts a chance at respectable citizenship.

France Refuses Swiss Plan for World Court Action

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

PARIS, Oct. 13.—[Tribune Radio.]—France today rejected the proposal to refer the question of a neutralized free zone on the Swiss frontier to the league of nations court at The Hague. The government takes the stand that The Hague court is not competent to interfere in the question of the French sovereignty in its territory, pointing out that Premier Poincare's decision to abolish the zone, established after the Napoleonic wars, merely makes the customs frontier identical with the political boundary.

WEEKS MAY PUT MUSCLE SHOALS UP TO CONGRESS

Secretary's Friends See Libel in Ford's Words.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—Secretary of War Weeks had a congressional investigation in mind when he referred in his reply to the attack by Henry Ford on his policy with respect to Muscle Shoals to his willingness "to place all the facts before a proper tribunal," it was learned officially today.

Numerous senators and congressmen who called at the office of the secretary of war today expressed the opinion that the Ford statement unquestionably was intended as an appeal for the sympathy of the farmer vote in preparation for Mr. Ford's candidacy for the presidency.

Political observers both in and out of the administration admitted that Mr. Ford apparently has won great popularity with the farmers of America with his announcements concerning Muscle Shoals and the possibility of converting the huge plant to the production of cheap nitrates for fertilizer. It was pointed out, however, that technical experts who have gone over the whole Ford plan have emphasized the necessity of definite assurances that the plant will come up to the expectations which have been engendered among farmers anxious for cheap fertilizer.

Those who have talked with Mr. Ford and with his engineers apparently believe there is doubt even in the mind of the auto king himself as to whether such sanguine expectations are justified.

SCIENCE FINDS CHEAPER WAY TO COOK, HEAT AND BAKE.
Coal and wood, with their dirt, drudgery, scarcity and high prices will soon be discarded by all up-to-date economical housekeepers, says science. A new device which can be set in any range or heater in a jiffy gives a better, cleaner heat. It mixes one part of coal oil with 20 parts of air, making gas even cheaper than city gas. WEEKS MAY PUT MUSCLE SHOALS UP TO CONGRESS

Secretary's Friends See Libel in Ford's Words.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—Secretary of War Weeks had congressional investigation in mind when he referred in his reply to the attack by Henry Ford on his policy with respect to Muscle Shoals to his willingness "to place all the facts before a proper tribunal," it was learned officially today.

Numerous senators and congressmen who called at the office of the secretary of war today expressed the opinion that the Ford statement unquestionably was intended as an appeal for the sympathy of the farmer vote in preparation for Mr. Ford's candidacy for the presidency.

Political observers both in and out of the administration admitted that Mr. Ford apparently has won great popularity with the farmers of America with his announcements concerning Muscle Shoals and the possibility of converting the huge plant to the production of cheap nitrates for fertilizer. AND THE KIDS CRIED "MORE"!

Pa and Ma Burdick of the Salvation Army, whose doughnuts won them fame during the world war, baked a few of their best for these Chicago kids yesterday. And were encored. The Salvation Army tomorrow will begin its campaign to raise $341,000 for its work here during the next year. The intensive drive will begin on Tuesday, and sixty-four miniature autos, racing on a huge signboard on the lake front, will mark the progress of the various groups. Commander Evangeline Booth will speak at a dinner in the Hotel Sherman tomorrow night. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

GIRL DISAPPEARS AFTER MYSTERY TELEPHONE CALL

Police yesterday sought the source of a mystery telephone call to the home of Miss Hazel Hawkinson, 19 years old, 459 Oakwood boulevard, in order to account for disappearance of the girl last Tuesday. Last night the girl's father, an insurance broker, said he received a telephone call from a strange man who asked for Miss Hawkinson, but who refused to give his name.

Mr. Hawkinson denied his daughter had any trouble that the family knew of. She is a graduate of Wendell Phillips High school and was a stenographer in a loop office.

ARMISTICE BALL WILL HAVE MANY MILITARY GUESTS

Every branch of the army and navy will be represented by their Chicago commanders and staffs at the Armistice ball to be given by the Military Intelligence association of the sixth army corps area in the Belden hotel on Nov. 10. Lieut. Col. William B. Graham, honorary president, and Capt. C. B. Hopkins, active president, are in charge of arrangements.

Among those expected to be present are Maj. Gen. Harry C. Hale, commanding the sixth corps area; Col. F. M. Caldwell and Col. Manus McCloskey; Maj. Gen. Milton J. Foreman, Maj. Gen. George Bell Jr., Capt. Waldo Evans of Great Lakes, Capt. Edward Evers of the naval reserve, and Col. C. B. Taylor of the marine corps.

FORD CO. MADE 7 MILLIONS IN WAR; U. S. MAKES AUDIT

That Sum Doesn't Include Profits on Motors.

Detroit, Mich., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—A letter from Henry Ford's secretary, E. G. Liebold, to Senator James Couzens, reveals that the Ford Motor company made a total net profit of $7,000,000 on $90,000,000 worth of war contracts.

Mr. Ford owned only 51 per cent of the Ford company during the war, and, accordingly, received only slightly more than one-half of the $7,000,000; but this included only war material manufactured under the Ford contracts, not including automobiles, trucks and tractors. It took in all such products as shells, caissons, helmets, Liberty engines and submarine chasers.

Since the close of the war Mr. Ford has bought out all other stockholders, and, in announcing his intention of returning his own personal profits, as told by Mr. Liebold's letter, does not speak for other war-time stockholders.

The letter to Senator Couzens also gives an outline of the situation with regard to government audits and settlements in connection with Ford contracts.

It is revealed that war department auditors were busy on the Ford books from the end of 1918 until just a few months ago. Then a second audit was started by authorization of the United States department of justice, and his audit virtually is completed.

ARREST CHEMIST IN FATAL BOOZE ORGY AT PANA

Pana, Ill., Oct. 13.—Robert A. Smith, chemist, wanted in connection with the deaths of five men and illness of eight others from drinking moonshine, was arrested at noon in Peoria, local authorities were advised. Sheriff Flescher announced he would bring Smith back.

The grand jury has been ordered to convene on Monday to investigate the deaths. The order was issued by City Judge John W. Preihs today. Judge Preihs promised "a most thorough and rigid investigation of the whole affair" and ordered a general cleanup.

Two victims, Edward M. Gaughan and his nephew, Charles E. Gaughan, were buried today. Business in Pana was suspended during the double funeral.

Those ill were reported as slightly improved today. The latest victim is Halfdane Bjorn, manager of a greenhouse manufacturing company, who was brought to a hospital late yesterday.

STOCK CONSENTS TO WIELD CHICAGO OPERA BATON FOR 'SIEGFRIED'

BY EDWARD MOORE.

Two items of news came out of the Civic Opera company yesterday. One was the confirmation of what was foreshadowed in the musical column of THE TRIBUNE yesterday, namely that Frederick Stock, conductor of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, had been invited to conduct Wagner's "Siegfried" when the opera company presents it, and that he had accepted. The other was a semi-private recital given by the most recent of the boy piano prodigies, Shura Cherkassky, in the box foyer of the auditorium.

Mr. Stock's invitation to be a guest conductor at the opera has been pending for some time. There was an earlier possibility of inviting Siegfried Wagner, the son of the composer, for the occasion, but later, and, it would seem, wiser councils prevailed.

—o—

No more eminent conductor than Mr. Stock, a Chicagoan, can be found, and in addition the alliance of two such great organizations as the Chicago Symphony orchestra and the Chicago Civic Opera company can but mean a decisive step forward in the city's music.

Mutual congratulations followed the invitation and its acceptance.

"It is difficult for me to find words to express my happiness," said Musical Director Giorgio Polacco of the opera. "I am delighted that Mr. Stock has accepted the invitation, and very happy that his board of directors has seen fit to allow him to accept."

Mr. Stock was equally delighted, and was desirous of starting at once to prepare the performance.

—o—

Shura Cherkassky is said to be eleven years old, and looks and talks like it, but does not play like it. He apparently combines a childhood's appreciation of music, the greatest of all, with some ideas about it that would not be out of place in an adult, and a pair of highly unusual if not entirely impeccable hands for its projection. For once there is a case of advance publicity calling the subject phenomenal, and the subject living up to the description.

He was heard in such places as Handel's Theme and Variations, Beethoven's "Ecossaises," and the Verdi-Liszt "Rigoletto" Fantasy, and they were played not only well but with individuality and a high degree of charm.

Member of British House of Rothschild Cuts Throat

LONDON, Oct. 13.—Testimony was given at a coroner's inquest today that Nathaniel Charles Rothschild, partner in M. M. Rothschild & Sons, committed suicide on Friday by cutting his throat after locking himself in the bathroom of his home at Ashton Wold. It was stated that he had been depressed. A verdict of suicide while temporarily insane was rendered. Mr. Rothschild, a son of the first Lord Rothschild, was chairman of the Alliance Assurance Co., Ltd. He was 43 years old.

REPORT CHICAGO MAN A SUICIDE IN MOSCOW JAIL

A. Stroller Tobinson, former Chicago attorney, closed a romantic career in soviet Russia by committing suicide in a Moscow prison, according to advices received today from Berlin by the Jewish Daily Forward of Chicago. His suicide, according to the report, followed the discovery by soviet officials of the embezzlement of considerable sums of money from the Industrial Bank of Moscow, of which he was the manager.

James Tobinson, formerly a Chicago civil engineer, and the brother of A. Stroller Tobinson, was arrested with his brother, a recent dispatch to THE TRIBUNE stated. It was asserted that the soviet government was dissatisfied with an accounting presented by the brothers as to the disposition of air fleet funds.

It was also intimated that the soviet was jealous of the financial success gained by the former Chicagoans.

A. Stroller Tobinson left Chicago shortly after the outbreak of the Russian revolution. He fought with the Red forces against Kolchak's White troops. He was reported to have been slain by Kolchak soldiers in the fall of 1918, but later turned up and became president of the Far Eastern Republic.

VISCOUNT GREY PROPHESIES.

Viscount Grey, British minister of foreign affairs when the world war began, now writes to the London Times: "Recent events have shown with horrid clearness that Europe is sliding slowly toward an abyss." And he asks: "Do we realise how far down the slope we have gone?"

The American witness sees few, if any signs, of such realization in Europe, except in Great Britain. On the continent at least we don't see much beside a melee of contending rancors and greeds, seldom mitigated by any impulse toward rational compromise or accord. Lord Grey says "another crisis such as the Italian-Greek controversy may bring us all to the final parting of the ways," and this seemed clear enough to us in America, so clear that it could testify to us only an incredible disregard of peace, an unbelievable willingness to plunge Europe once more into the torment of war.

So Lord Grey declares "Europe has drifted helplessly but perceptibly toward future war," and he solemnly warns that "the future liberties of Europe depend upon regulating disputes between nations by justice and law." Lord Grey says Europe has "drifted helplessly." "Drifting" is hardly the word for the fierce thrusts of passion and self-interests which have swept Europe through five years of turmoil. Nor is "helplessly" the adverb we would choose, for there has been at all times sufficient help, if European governments and peoples had sought help for peace and not regardless of peace.

It is because Europe wants other things more than it wants peace, that there is no peace, and America is invited into her affairs in the hope of her ministering to those ends, not the single sufficient end of peace. Europe can have peace as soon as Europe puts peace first in her thoughts. Europe can have peace without a dollar or a bayonet from us, as soon as Europe makes peace the common and central purpose of her politics. But while Europe makes war or prepares for war, America cannot bring her peace. While Europe moves, not helplessly, but under selfish pressures, deliberate if not wise, America can only wait.

And Europe may make up its mind that America will wait, in spite of the clamor of partisan minorities and sentimentalists in the nation. The vision of the nation and its authoritative representatives is not clouded. It sees Europe wracked with the fever of its own making. It sees the European nations moving not toward peace, but toward war, and if war comes America will not enter it. America entered the late war to make peace in Europe possible, and its high purpose has been betrayed. It will not again send its sons to die for a peace which Europe has foiled.

Europe is like a ship which has emerged from a tempest, unmasted and sleak, whose crew have fallen upon one another to rob and murder instead of joining to clear away the wreckage and stop the leaks and set the course for port. Perhaps America might conceivably impose enough force to compel peace upon all. We are not yet ready to attempt the gigantic task of putting all the old world in irons.

President Coolidge has just let it be known that he does not see any hope at present that our suggestion of conference would produce the sort of conference it would pay us to enter, and our opinion is that he is emphatically right. Past conferences have accomplished nothing at best, and at worst have driven allies apart. A conference lacking the will to agree would be worse than a waste of time and effort. When Europe is ready for peace on the only terms which make peace possible, terms of mutual concession and cooperation, America can participate and will. But not before.

"GERMANY WOULD HAVE DONE IT."

Ardent partisans of France frequently fall back upon an argument in justification of the occupation of the Ruhr that seems to us to leave their case rather worse off than it deserves to be. They say that whatever the French do in the way of occupation, dismemberment, etc., the Germans would have done the same to France if they had won.

This may be true. But the American people went to war because they did not wish such a code of international conduct to be victorious. The very people who now justify France in doing to Germany what they assert Germany would have done to France are those who were most passionate in their condemnation of Germany as barbarous and in the demand that we intervene to "save civilization."

How is it that if Germany does a thing it is a threat against civilization, but if France does it, it becomes "justice"? Did the United States go to war to permit France to do to Germany what we declared it was barbarous for Germany to do to France? Would civilization be imperiled by Germany's doing to France what it is proper for France to do to Germany?

There are respectable arguments in support of M. Poincare's policy, but an argument based on the assumption that Germany would have instructed France can hardly appeal to Americans, saving only blind partisans. Our soldiers, we think, died for a principle of international conduct which the American conscience recognizes as binding as well upon one nation as another. To berate the Germans and approve the French on the same grounds is not what we should call honest.

WHAT THE REDS HAVE DONE TO RUSSIA.

We shall have a sheaf of first hand reports on the state of Russia when congress begins to debate the expected resolution for the recognition of the bolshevik government. A dozen or so of senators have made reconnaissance in that interesting country, and several already have given us at least a glimpse of their conclusions. How reliable the opinions of these distinguished scouts may be, depends upon the opportunities offered and accepted to get at fundamentals and also the ability of the reporter to render sound judgments.

Meanwhile, it might be well to get a general survey of certain general economic facts which it is not necessary to travel to Moscow to obtain, and for that purpose we recommend the reading of an illuminating article by Mr. Lincoln Hutchinson, an economist and expert in international trade, contributed to the Political Science Quarterly of June.

In sum, Mr. Hutchinson, basing his figures chiefly on bolshevik sources, shows the extent to which the productivity of Russia has been reduced since the pre-war period, including the slight recovery registered since what Lenin adroitly labels the strategic retreat from communism began. As he remarks, "it is well known that since the revolution of 1917 a tragic economic disaster has overtaken the country. Industries, the transportation system, the credit institutions, and the entire economic structure of the country have been undermined. The production and exchange of goods have dropped to a small fraction of their pre-revolutionary dimensions." This generalization is supported with soviet statistics which we have not space to reproduce in this place. But the existing situation is suggested in the following: "Before the war the people of present Russia as a whole had a superabundant supply of foodstuffs. They imported large quantities of food, it is true, but these were in the nature of luxury goods; and the exports exceeded imports by some $180,000,000. Now in a good harvest year, they have barely enough to meet their own requirements, while the area under cultivation and the number of domestic animals are declining. Before the war they consumed manufactured goods each year to the value of $1,435,000,000, of which $1,250,000,000 were made at home and $185,000,000 imported. Now their home production barely reaches $250,000,000 and their imports are negligible."

It follows therefore that to come back, Russia must nearly double her agricultural production—merely to meet her own domestic needs. In addition Russia must increase her present supply of manufactured goods nearly five fold. That can be accomplished only by restoration of her home industries to pre-war efficiency, or by procuring means to purchase abroad.

As to restoration through Russian effort and resources: agricultural restoration is the first essential. Even the soviet government now realizes that revival of the incentive to produce is necessary and incentive cannot revive unless the peasants can be assured that needed clothing, household utensils, and equipment, such as machinery and hardware, can be got in exchange for any surplus they raise over their own personal needs. But even if incentive could be revived by moral or political appeal, which have not produced results up to this time, restoration of production cannot be accomplished unless equipment is restored. It is now in a sad state of depletion. For five years the normal supply of equipment has been lacking and work animals have decreased by 50 per cent. The pre-war supply of agricultural implements came to about $25,000,000, $6,000,000 in import and $19,000,000 in home production. Now there are no imports and home production has been reduced to a miserable fraction. Other industries are in much the same state. Essentials are everywhere lacking. Each industry must wait for products necessary to enable it to start. But these products can only be produced after some other industry has started. Thus there is a vicious circle. The wheel is on a dead center.

What then of aid from abroad to start the wheel? That depends upon foreign credit. Bolshevik policy has destroyed the moral foundation of credit, but waive that on the fragile theory that the soviet government is now ready to keep faith. Even so, foreign credit must depend upon the ability to repay and Mr. Hutchinson's figures are not encouraging. With Russian production and commerce at a pre-war level the balance between exports and imports amounted only to $180,000,000. For urgent requirements soviet authorities estimate a total of $6,000,000,000. If interest on war loans is waived and that on pre-war loans and invested capital balanced by a restoration of the pre-war balance of $180,000,000, still to cover interest and sinking fund on the new advance of $6,000,000,000, an increase of $600,000,000 in the balance of exports would be necessary.

If manufacture can be maintained at present level and the Russian people out their pre-war consumption by 50 per cent, there would still be a gap of $500,000,000 to be filled. If in addition, investment of foreign capital reached only one-fourth of the Russian estimate of their requirements for agriculture and transportation, this would call for an additional $300,000,000. "Payments for the manufactures imported for direct consumption plus payments for interest and amortization on old and new loans and credit would call for an export of food and raw materials running from $700,000,000 for the first year up to $800,000,000 in the fifth."

Bolshevism has ruined Russian production at home, and destroyed not only the material but the moral basis on which foreign aid are used. In due time these effects may be removed as the bolshevik régime passes away. But it will be at best a slow and painful process.

LESSONS UNLEARNED.

Prof. Scott, director of the school of commerce, University of Wisconsin, discussing the prevailing ignorance of economics, says we see the present and the obvious but do not foresee consequences. We saw certain benefits we expected from sharply graduated income taxes, such as increased revenue and what we considered a better distribution of the tax burden. We did not foresee the diversion of capital from essential industries. In arbitrary regulation of commodity prices we saw the defeat of profiteers and the stimulation of production of war materials.

"What we did not see was a remote consequence—the disturbance of the normal price and profit relations upon which the successful and smooth operation of our entire economic mechanism depends, interference with the normal flow of investment streams, the overequipment of some industries, the underequipment of others, and the fostering of the belief that the government is omnipotent in economic matters and can arbitrarily adjust prices and profits to suit its own ideas of justice or expediency, or to meet the desires of blocs or classes that may chance to be politically dominant."

But foresight into the often baffling play of economic forces is naturally a very rare quality. What is more discouraging than our lack of it is our refusal to see consequences after they have arrived. Resistance to amendment of the ineffective income tax schedules, proposal for a restoration of the excess profits tax, price fixing for wheat are all being clamorously demanded by self-styled friends of the people. It is said experience is the best teacher, but there are many minds incapable of or unwilling to learn even from experience.

THE COMMUTER'S TICKET.

Dawn and the tops of the white pine are against golden fleece in the east, only the tops. All else is hidden in the silver gray mists upon which the flaming gates are opening, all else except a strip of sand beach beyond the sedges where waves ripple in from the misted lake.

Below freezing and white frost on the ground, on the wood pile, the pump handle; white streamers from the balsam, the hemlock, the birch, from all the trees and brush where unseen webs and gossamer have been covered with frost to festoon the woods.

A chill wind starting from the north to roll the waves in white caps as the mists lift and horizons come into view. The fire runs up the logs. The kettle sings and warmth comes into the house.

Noon and the sun has warmed the sheltered hillsides and birch thickets, where all the leaves have gone from the roof and have carpeted the ground with rustling yellow. Mallards float in still water by the reeds of a protected bank. The north is blue black with clouds, a frontier of December.

Everywhere is the full token of autumn, the complete being, the post-equinoctial, not afire with colors but with brown expectancy of bleak elements, crisp and full of gusto, but in the casements of a year which has sprouted, bloomed, and withered.

Sundown and the golden fleece with which the day began. Shadows draw in the horizons and there is nothing beyond the pines which in the dawn were minarets in the glory of the east. There is a vesper song. In the immensity of the shadows obliterating the pines a white throat sings, the merest mite of a melody as of pipes blown softly by a sleepy, fairy child on a bed of balsam. Wild geese honk in flight. Silence and the clock of night winds the stars across the sky. Sirius and Orion climb the arc and winter is not far behind.

LOOSE READING.

Comment which reaches us from time to time, both by letter and by word of mouth, reveals a bad popular habit of what we might term "loose reading," which may properly be catalogued with the other common errors of loose thinking, loose talking, and loose writing.

Our dictionary gives one definition of loose as "lax in power, quality, principle." That reveals most clearly the cost of the error to which we would bring attention. It is waste. What is even worse, it is likely to be a habit, which piles one waste upon another in such manner that in the end vast amounts of time, mental vigor, and general effectiveness are thrown on the scrap heap together. The thought of such accumulated waste is appalling.

The loose reader is probably the progenitor of the other errors. He is the one who hurries through a paragraph, a book, or a column in such manner that the thought or fact conveyed by the writer is entirely misconstrued or misunderstood. He then forms his opinion upon this false foundation and probably further complicates his error by loose or illogical thinking. Loose talk or loose writing upon the subject follows inevitably if he expresses any view whatever. It all reveals a painful and demoralising slackness of mind.

Any person who reads carefully, with mind as well as eyes open, knows innumerable incidents illustrative of this error of loose reading on the part of others. A friend riding to work with you on the "L" will reveal it in some incorrect statement of an item you may have just finished reading in your own newspaper. Another will give an oral review of a book with which you are acquainted and will make misstatements which you recognize as flagrant. Another writes to a newspaper with comment on news or editorial which shows a complete failure to grasp the fact or thought upon which he expresses opinion.

It is not a matter of differing opinions. No fault is to be found on that score. It is the palpable error clearly due to too hasty, incomplete, or loose reading, which is wrong. It is a habit which piles up errors through life. It can and ought to be corrected by each individual through his or her own effort. Such correction will pay huge dividends in mistakes avoided, time saved, and mental ability improved.

Editorial of the Day

ESSINGTON FOR GOVERNOR.

[Fulton Journal.]

Just now we want to say that the Journal is, of course, for the nomination of Senator Essington of Streator for governor at the Republican primaries next year.

A number of party leaders have proposed him. Gov. Lowden has set the seal of his approval upon him. He is the anti-Small candidate. He has a record of fighting Small. He is reported to be a high minded man. We are satisfied with him.

Any third candidate will be a stalking horse for Small, no matter who he is or how plausible the talk he makes. In 1920 Carlstrom was a stalking horse for Small, and, by working the northern counties strongly, drew off 20,000 votes, most of which would surely have gone for Oglesby and effected his nomination. Small will likely try such tactics again, or may withdraw and throw his support to some person openly or secretly friendly to him.

Mr. Voter, keep you eye on the ball.

The great moral issue before the people of this state is to make sure of the defeat of Small and all he stands for.

Watch carefully. Efforts will be made to confuse you and to cloud the issue.

Have an eye single to supporting Essington, and then you cannot go wrong.

If Small should withdraw and get behind some other candidate, Smallism under another name will smell no sweeter.

CURES.

JAMES O'DONNELL BENNETT says: "Rabelais attacked everybody, but he did it all in a masquerade at once so ingenious and so disarming that everybody laughed at everybody except himself, the teachers at the lawyers, and the lawyers at the priests, and the priests at the officials and the cardinals at the kings." That was my reaction on reading Henry Ford's "Autobiography." I was so impressed with the way he swatted the bankers that I forgave him the swatting he gave the doctors and the hospitals. I imagine "capital" was so happy at his attack on "labor" that they did not notice his attack on "capital," and "labor" gloated over the attack on "capital" and forgot the whipping they received. His book is great because it gives everybody ammunition for his fight on the other fellow. All of which comes into mind as one reads Dr. J. J. Walsh's "Cures."

If you are a physician you have a rollicking good time reading of the ridiculousness of the claims of osteopaths, chiropractors, and Christian Scientists, but hold; there is a rod in pickle for you. Your brother, Walsh, has a few remarks to make about some of your cures. What a good time the osteopaths, chiropractors, and Christian Scientists will have reading the chapters wherein fun is poked at you!

You believe in this century. You laugh long and loud when you read of how the ancients were taken in by cures, but turn over a few pages and read the facts which show that all your vaunted knowledge, wisdom, and experience have not availed to make you proof against the fakers. If Sherlock Holmes is right, the spirits of the dead need no comic strips. They get all the laugh they need when they think of what suckers we are when it comes to cures.

If you are from the learned east, you laugh at the crudeness of the west. How they bit at Schlatter and Dowie. The westerner replies to the jibes by citing Quimby and Perkins and Davis. New England has been the richest of sucker factories.

Dr. Walsh classifies the wild and woolly cures and curers into fourteen types and gives to each a chapter. Regardless of type, the cures pursue about the same course. An incubation period, a period of onset, a period of peak, and a period of decline. A few merge into some form of established institution, losing all their primary qualifications. Most of them disappear completely. None of them cure, in the proper sense.

All of them cure in the sense that they did what suggestion could do. So long as they begot faith they accomplished results. They relieved many symptoms. But to get the good of them, one had to be on schedule time. An old doctor said of one of them: "Take it. Take it while it cures. After a while it will be found that it does not cure and you will have missed your chance."

So it was. So it always will be. Amen.

DOPING THE CHILD.

R. R. S. writes: Have a 3 year old child, constipated since birth. Enemas finally failed to produce results. Soapsticks and suppositories caused too severe a strain on child. It is an impossibility to regulate every child's diet, so it is necessary to soften the stool in some other way.

A physician with considerable experience in these cases recommends injecting each night a tablespoonful or two of olive oil, allowing to remain over night, and, if possible, have child take by mouth a spoonful of paraffin oil, as this, not being digested, will help soften bowel content.

After three years of nerve racking worry over our child's condition and suffering, the above remedy is of priceless value to us.

REPLY.

Few parents will care to dope their children daily with paraffin oil and to load the daily oil onsus on them. No one except a worrier would do that.

BATHING AFTER MEALS.

J. R. H. writes: 1. How long do you think a person should wait, after a good, substantial meal, to go in bathing?

2. Is it harmful to take exercise immediately after a meal?

REPLY.

After eating a full meal it is customary to wait two hours before bathing or working. Digesting a full meal is rather heavy work. An elderly person with somewhat high blood pressure and hard arteries should not do even moderate work while digesting his food and not feeling the strain. A young person might do even fairly hard work during the two hours of stomach digestion and not notice the effects.

However, if the work was excessive, such as running a footrace or fighting, not even an adolescent could carry off the two jobs simultaneously with credit to himself.

Swimming interferes doubly because the effect of chilling the skin is added to the effect of exertion.

BOOKS ON BABY'S DIET.

Mrs. B. N. A. writes: Would you suggest where I can get a book on diets for infants past 6 months of age?

My baby is nearing 7 months and is being fed on a little breast milk, milk with diluted water, and orange juice.

REPEATED REQUESTS FOR FILLING

Chicago, Oct. 8.—[Friend of the People.]—I have been trying to get the street department of the city of Chicago to fill in the holes on West 111th street, from Halsted to the Panhandle railroad, but to date have been unable to get any action from them.

It is practically impossible to drive on this street without breaking a few springs in your car, and I would appreciate if you can advise me in what manner I could get action from the city street department to have these holes filled in. F. J.

Notwithstanding above statement to the contrary, action has been taken by this bureau on receipt of previous requests for filling for West 111th street. Our ward forces have filled in the depressions in West 111th street from Vincennes avenue to Halsted street and from Halsted street to the Panhandle tracks. Filling, however, is only a temporary expedient and street should be paved by special assessment at the earliest opportunity.

POLE BLOCKS GARAGE ENTRANCE.

Cicero, Ill., Oct. 8.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—In the alley directly in the rear of our garage is an old telegraph pole. We have repeatedly notified the Public Service company to transfer the equipment to the new pole ten feet away and remove the old one. Three months have passed and nothing has been done, resulting in a loss of three months' garage rent. What recourse have we? J. J. K.

If there are no wires on the old pole apparently the simplest course would be for you to remove it yourself. The risk of suit would not seem great.

PROBATING THE WILL.

Chicago, Oct. 9.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—A will covering money, stocks, and bonds was made in another state. Both testator and sole heir have since moved to Illinois. All money has been placed in bank account in this state jointly with testator and heir. Stocks and bonds are signed in blank.

1. At death of testator is it necessary to probate will?

2. If so, can it be probated in Illinois or must it be done in the state in which it was made?

3. If any legal action is taken to break the will, in which state must same be filed? B. X. M.

1. Depends largely on how strict the deposit company is. Take the matter up with them.

2 and 3. In Illinois. You should make sure that the instrument has been executed in accordance with Illinois law.

CORRECTING THE MONTREAL STAR ON THE SEAWAY PROJECT.

Utica, Miss., Oct. 4.—The Editorial of the Day for Sunday, Sept. 30, under the title of "Chicago and Our Waterways," reprinted from the Montreal Star, deserves some comment lest some people should think there is a semblance of truth in that article.

On Jan. 20, 1920, the governments of the United States and Canada referred the question of the improvement of the St. Lawrence river between Lake Ontario and Montreal for navigation and power to the international joint commission.

The findings of the commission as published in senate document No. 114, Sixty-seventh congress, second session, "St. Lawrence Waterway," take up fully the characteristics of the St. Lawrence basin, existing canals, commerce on the great lakes, analysis of testimony, transportation problem, and the water power problem.

The report as signed on Dec. 19, 1921, by all six men recommends in brief:

1. That the governments of the United States and Canada enter into an arrangement by way of treaty for a scheme of improvement of the St. Lawrence river between Lake Ontario and Montreal.

2. That the new Welland canal be embodied in said scheme and treated as a part thereof.

3. That the cost of all navigation works be apportioned between the two countries on the basis of the benefits each will receive from the new waterway.

The joint commission estimates the cost of the project from Lake Ontario to Montreal as $252,000,000. A vast difference from the "$400,000,000 to construct a modest preliminary scheme," as the Montreal Star would have us believe.

Recommendation No. 2 clearly shows that Canada will pay nowhere near 50 per cent of the cost of the works and that the United States even offers to pay the biggest part of the new Welland canal, a structure wholly within Canadian territory.

The opponents of the St. Lawrence waterway can find no real or valid argument against the project, so they adopt the method picturing the backers of this project as rich promoters and propagandists, forgetting that the people of eighteen western states and the western provinces of Canada are behind the St. Lawrence waterway and will not permit the selfish interests of New York or Montreal to block the program.

LET IN THE AMERICAN-MINDED IMMIGRANTS.

Chicago, Oct. 5.—Regarding the letter, "America's Ancestry," which appeared in your columns today, would like to ask Mr. O'Brien where he gets the idea that our political institutions came from Ireland and that the Irish were the largest racial unit of our revolutionary stock.

Any one who knows anything about history at all will tell him that our Declaration of Independence and bill of rights were based on England's Magna Charta and the doctrines of Rousseau, Voltaire, and other writers of the period of the French revolution. The Puritans settled New England, the Cavaliers, Virginia; the Dutch, New York; the Quakers, Pennsylvania, and small groups of various nationalities settled in other parts. A schoolboy would laugh at Mr. O'Brien's argument as well as his reasons for choosing July 4 instead of July 3 for our national anniversary. I am second to none in my admiration for the Irish for what they are, what they have done, and what they stand for. But I believe in placing credit where credit is due.

A quota based on the census of 1920 would give us a preponderance of the races who built up the United States, and for that reason every thinking American should demand it. Our country's present greatness was not achieved by people who use bath tubs for coal bins and live together in quarters a self-respecting Iowa porker would disdain. We have more than enough black handers, bootleggers, dope peddlers, white slavers, and kidnapers. We want people who will live, think and act like Americans, and who can enjoy without abusing the privileges and advantages of a free country. It has not only been written, but scientifically proven as well, that a silk purse cannot be made from a sow's ear.

WHEN THE MAYOR NEEDS A FRIEND.

Chicago, Oct. 9.—The course you have decided to pursue is the only true one. Stick to it, if you've got to battle alone that line till the end of your term.

The best citizens are going to stand with you through thick and thin, through the last scrimmage, too.

They are prepared, determined to hang to you, even though they've got to hang with you.

Let the knockers knock and the scoffers gruntled grunt; they are doomed to defeat.

If we are to be preserved outlaws cannot triumph over order, wrong over fairness, might over right. Respect for law must and shall prevail.

The stand you have assumed will win but win the praise, good-will, and support of all level minded people.

Let no man or woman deter you from your path, even though their former friendship turn to animosity.

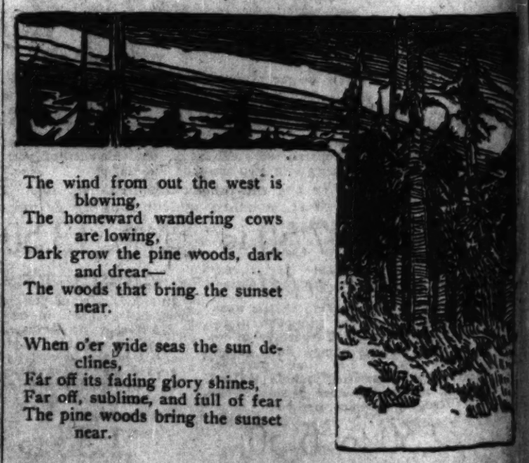
Such spirit as you have shown made Theodore Roosevelt not only the mightiest one of his time, but one of the real great men of history.

Therefore I say to you: "How to decline, let the chips fall where ever they may." JOHN A. THOLSEN.

POEMS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

THE WOODS THAT BRING THE SUNSET.

By R. W. Gilder.



The wind from out the west is blowing,
The homeward wandering cows are lowing,
Dark grow the pine woods, dark and drear—
The woods that bring the sunset near.

When o'er wide seas the sun declines,
Far off its fading glory shines,
Far off, sublime, and full of fear
The pine woods bring the sunset near.

This house that looks to east, to west,
This, dear one, is our home, our rest;
Yonder the stormy sea, and here
The woods that bring the sunset near.

BOMB WRECKS JEWELRY STORE OF KLANSMAN

Can't Be Blown Out of Order, He Says.

Wrecking of the jewelry store at 344 East 61st street yesterday morning by a bomb was ascribed by the owner, G. A. Penrose, to his membership in the Ku Klux Klan. He said he had received several letters warning him to drop his membership, which went unheeded.

Poling, remembering that a bomb on Thursday night blew up the press of Jack Florsum on 55th street near Ingleside avenue, where a klan organ was formerly published, agreed with Penrose that the anti-klan was active.

Won't Be Bombed Out.

Penrose said he was proud of his membership and not even bombs could shake him. He was once tried and acquitted of accessory to murder, Mrs. Louise Sear Van Kuren, who shot her husband, being also acquitted.

John A. McNulty, 6111 Greenwood avenue, responded to a telephone call yesterday morning to come to his drug store at 6200 Cottage Grove avenue and fill a prescription to save a life. Three men were awaiting him when he arrived at the store. They robbed the place of nine cases of whisky after he had unlocked the door.

Clarence Burdick, druggist at 2960 West Madison street, reported that he had been robbed of fifty pints of whisky. Two men with revolvers did it, he said.

Tailor Beaten by Sluggers.

Arthur Johnson, 32 years old, 2419 Beach street, a tailor, was found unconscious in a hallway of the building at 529 South Market street by early arriving workers. He had been brutally beaten by men presumed to be labor sluggers.

John Bishop, owner of a confectionery store at 2938 East 79th street, notified the police that he believed he had shot one of two men who attempted to break into his store Friday night. The police found a stream of blood leading away from a window, but no other trace of the burglars.

RICHARD GILL, 76, CITY EMPLOYE 45 YEARS, IS DEAD

Veterans in the city's employ learned yesterday of the death in the county hospital of Richard Gill, 76 years old. For forty-five years, until he was retired several years ago on a pension, Mr. Gill had worked in the sewer department, where he was known to practically every contractor and builder in the city. He was well known on the north side, where he had made many friends through his Irish wit. Several days ago he was taken ill on the street and rushed to the county hospital, where he lay unconscious for several days before his identity was established. He died yesterday afternoon.

MRS. J. F. MEYERS, SISTER OF FATHER YOUNG, IS DEAD

Mrs. Meyers was a daughter of John P. Young of Michigan City. She is survived by three other brothers, Peter and Joseph Young of Chicago and John Young of Minneapolis, and two sisters, Mrs. Felix Wahlheim of Rock Island and Mrs. William P. Ryan of Michigan City.

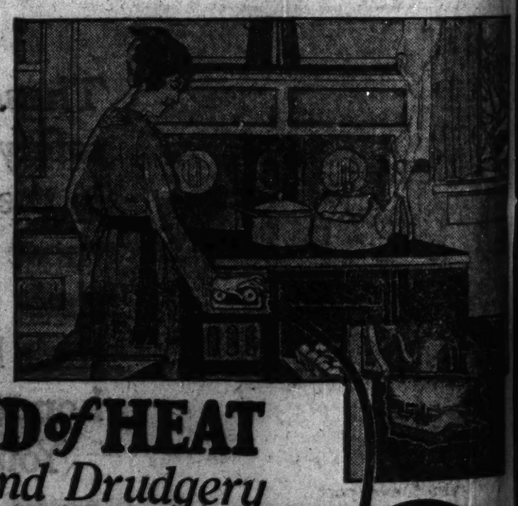
DON'T BURN COAL!
No more fires to build, bank or watch—no more dirty, heavy coal to carry and lift—no more clouds of ashes to breathe, or back-breaking scuttles to empty—no more exorbitant fuel prices since this wonderful new invention. Here is the amazing new kind of heat that has ended forever the days of women's slavery to household drudgery. The wonderful invention of Mr. Oliver of St. Louis in one minute turns any coal or wood burner into a modern, up-to-date gas stove. It gives as much or little heat as wanted by simply turning a valve!


NEW KIND of HEAT
Ends Dirt and Drudgery
Fits Any Stove or Furnace
MR. OLIVER calls his invention the Oliver Oil-Gas Burner, because it uses 95% air and only 5% oil, the cheapest fuel there is, turning them into an invisible gas that burns with an intensely hot flame. No wicks. No smoke. No odor.

STATE WILL ASK CHIEF TO LOCATE PERCY B. COFFIN

Small Aid Is Elusive in Expert Fee Inquiry.

James J. Barbour told the state senate in its closing hours that the income of Percy B. Coffin, chairman of the Small's state tax commission, last year "was around $100,000."

These two names, that of Barbour as a prosecutor and that of Coffin as a much sought witness, were linked together yesterday by Assistant Attorney General Frederick A. Brown, in charge of the investigation of Thompson-Lundin city hall scandals. Mr. Brown said he would ask the chief of police to serve Mr. Coffin with a subpoena because process servers in both Sangamon and Cook counties had failed to find him.

Coffin received 10 per cent of the fees which Ernest H. Lyons, real estate expert, received from the city, according to street reports of Lyons' testimony before the grand jurors.

Barbour on Trail Again.

Mr. Brown said that Mr. Barbour, who recently joined the attorney general's staff, had been devoting most of his time during the last week to investigating board of local improvements actions during the late city administration.

It is understood accountants have finished their preliminary survey of Expert Lyons' books, which he has produced for inspection. These indicate, as Lyons is said to have testified, that Coffin was given 10 per cent of the $580,000 paid Lyons by the city within one year for his expert services. But the books are said to show that these payments were "for services rendered," instead of payments of profits to a partner. This is the relationship between Coffin and Lyons, according to reports of the latter's testimony.

What of Securities?—Query.

There are other items of outlay on the part of Mr. Lyons which will need either explanation from him or investigation by the attorney general's staff before they are satisfactory to the inquistors.

On their face the books are said to give no indication that Coffin received more than the alleged 10 per cent. The books relate to 1920 and 1921. No large fees were collected by Lyons from the city in 1922 or 1923. But he told aldermen at one time that he was prepared to make payments to the city, if it was found that he owed the city anything, which must have meant that he had large sums either in cash or liquid securities. The books produced by the expert give no indication of what may have happened to cash or securities last year or this year.

The next session of the grand jury will be held Wednesday evening.

FIGHTS FOR GRANDCHILDREN

Mrs. Julia Jensen and three grandchildren, to retain whom she is fighting in court. Mrs. Jensen declares she promised her daughter on her deathbed that she would keep and rear the little ones, and adds that the father, who seeks to obtain them, had left them in her care four years without seeming to want them. The children are, left to right: Ruby, Virginia, and Pearl Krueger.

GRANDMOTHER, FATHER WAR FOR THREE CHILDREN

Three children yesterday became the center of a legal dispute for their custody, waged by their father, Arthur Krueger of Forest Park, against their grandmother, Mrs. Julia Jansen, 878 North Avers avenue, who told Superior Judge Marcus Kavanagh that she had given a death bed promise to her daughter six weeks ago that she would always care for the children.

Charges Krueger Was Cruel.

The children, Ruby, 9; Virginia, 7, and Pearl, 5, clung to their grandmother in the courtroom. Mrs. Jansen charged in an answer to Krueger's petition that he had treated his wife cruelly and caused her to leave him. The children, for nearly four years, she said, have been in her custody, and Krueger has never shown any affection for them, according to her answer. He has not visited them since December, 1922, the answer declared.

Pending the hearing of the case on Oct. 22, Judge Kavanagh ordered that the children remain with their grandmother.

Fights for Daughter.

Miss Marie Calnan, 718 Gunderson avenue, Oak Park, who is seeking the custody of her 11 year old daughter, Kathleen, from the girl's foster parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Weightman, 4336 Schubert avenue, again appeared before Judge Hugo Pam, who continued the case until Oct. 17. In the meantime, he said, Kathleen should remain with the Weightmans.

Miss Calnan's attorneys argued that the child, under her foster parents' influence, might be poisoned against her. Judge Pam replied that if the evidence warranted it he might order Kathleen to remain with Miss Calnan for a month so that she might choose for herself which home she prefers.

BATHING SUIT BOOTLEG SCREEN, POLICE ALLEGE

Wearing a bathing suit and pitching horseshoes, his right hand pitted against his left, on the beach at 41st street and the lake, James Fredrickson, 1146 East 43d street, was arrested by Policemen William F. Taterka and George Wise of the Hyde Park station.

The police told Judge Newcomer that the bathing suit and the horseshoes were only stage properties and that Frederickson really hung around the beach to sell liquor to track laborers on the I. C. railroad. They found two bottle of moonshine buried in the sand near by, they said.

They also related the story of how last summer Frederickson, suspected by the police, leaped into the lake to prove he was a bona fide bather and almost drowned.

Frederickson denied yesterday in Desplaines street court that he was the owner of the buried liquor. The charge was amended to disorderly conduct and he was fined $100 and costs.

PINCHOT TELLS WHAT'S WHAT TO HIS PAY ROLLERS

Harrisburg, Pa., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—A state employe is not a politician first and a public servant afterward, according to Gov. Pinchot. Employes may support any candidates they choose, he said today, but he added:

"I want it clearly understood that political activity in opposition to the success of this administration will be followed by immediate dismissal."

The governor's statement is the result of a letter sent to the heads of state hospitals and other institutions this week by Dr. Ellen C. Potter, secretary of welfare, which indicates that persons who opposed the governor at the primary in 1922 could not be engaged in a state institution. Her letter put the matter entirely up to the governor, who, however, does not back it up in its entirety.

Italians Get Big Grain Concession in Albania

ROME, Oct. 13.—The Albanian government it was announced today, has agreed to give concessions to Italian financiers for the zone of Musocchia, which comprises more than 100,000 hectares (247,100 acres) of land, capable of producing annually about 4,000,000 quintals (over 44,000 tons) of grain. This will considerably reduce the amount of grain required by Italy from abroad.

SUIT ATTACKS LEGAL STATUS OF PHOTO RECORD

Thousands of dollars' worth of equipment, installed by County Recorder Joseph A. Haas to record deeds photographically, is threatened with banishment as a result of an action taken before the Supreme court yesterday.

William and Mary E. Armknecht of Chicago obtained a writ of mandamus in a case involving the transfer of land in Cook county, after denying that a photographic copy of their deed is sufficient as a legal record. The hearing of arguments was set for next Thursday.

Forgetful Lawyer Loses His License to Practice

Harry A. Myerowitz, Chicago lawyer, who was disbarred some time ago on charges of careless and negligent handling of his business, was denied reinstatement to the Illinois bar by the Supreme court yesterday. Among the charges made against him was forgetting all about two cases after making promises to his clients and accepting their fees.

INJURED BY RAIL SPARK.

A shot of flame, jumping from a track switch that was just being turned, yesterday burned the face of Frank Miller, 2451 Montrose avenue, a passenger on a passing Ravenswood L train.

CHICAGO GIRL'S FIRST ATTEMPT WINS FIRST PRIZE

Comics Contest Draws Out the Ideas.

BY NORA COLLINS.

Come one! Come all!

Now is the time for "you with that good cartoon idea" to enter the $10,000 CARTOON CONTEST! You may win a cash prize. Get busy.

Every week there is $1,000 given away for the ninety-four best suggestions received. Is your name among the winners for today? Look over the list if you submitted an idea on coupon No. 3.

Here is an idea for Gasoline Alley and little Skeezix. It comes from an "interested and enthusiastic fan" who wants Walt to buy Skeezix a tricycle, and then we would see what a zealous little mechanic Skeezix would make for the "Alley" with the others!

Surely you have cartoon ideas that may be prize winners tucked away somewhere in your cranium. Call them out! Jot them down. What would you have happen to our comic folk? Bring your ideas to light! We want to hear about them. We want good cartoon ideas, and we are giving away $10,000 in cash for them to introduce THE TRIBUNE'S new enlarged eight page comic section. Send your ideas scurrying to THE TRIBUNE office.

Read this idea, one among thousands, and perhaps you will understand better the substance of the contest—perhaps you will understand better how to go about it.

Take Smitty, for example. One suggestion to Walter Berndt, the illustrator of Smitty, reads: "I would love to see your little straggler, "Smitty," who is never on time, be obliged to punch a time clock."

Poor Smitty! With his short legs having to climb on a chair to reach the clock! And by the time he has the chair placed and gets on top of it—he is later than ever!

Many interesting complications could arise from the idea, don't you think? Wonder if you have a better one? Send it in now if you have! It may be a prize winner.

If you have not already entered the contest—REMEMBER it is only just starting for you! Today's first prize winner, Miss Gladys Forbes, 4638 Warwick avenue, won $250 on her first attempt. It was an idea for Perry Winkle—a very funny prank of his which turned out to be a joke on himself after all. Why don't you try—NOW—TODAY?

Winnie Quits Society.

"How about having Winnie's good nature get the best of her ambition for society just once and have her give a really and truly party for the 'Rinkey-Dinks?' writes another contestant. Can you imagine what a thrill that would be for those little urchin friends of Perry's?

Now what are your thoughts? Don't wait—you may forget them. Write them each on a separate sheet of paper while they are fresh in your memory and address them to whichever artist you have the suggestion for, Postoffice Box 1539, Chicago, Ill.

Here Are Details.

To introduce the new enlarged Eight Page Comic Section of THE CHICAGO SUNDAY TRIBUNE and to secure suggestions for it THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE offers $10,000 in Cash Prizes for Cartoon Ideas. One thousand dollars in cash will be paid every week for eight weeks; in addition, a Grand Prize of $2,000 will be paid for the best of all the ideas submitted.

The $1,000 given away every week will be divided as follows:

First prize	$ 250
Second prize	100
Third prize	50
Fourth prize	25
Next 25 prizes—$10 each	250
Next 65 prizes—$5 each	325
94 prizes, totaling	$1,000

2. Contest is open to every man, woman, boy, and girl, except employes of THE TRIBUNE and their families. It does not matter where you live.

3. You do not have to draw. Simply submit ideas in writing. Ideas must not exceed 200 words. You may submit as many as you wish.

4. Ideas may be submitted with coupons published in THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE Comic Section every Sunday, or on a separate sheet of paper. All ideas must bear a number. Ideas for this week should be marked "No. 6," both on envelope and inclosure.

5. All ideas must be addressed to the artist for whom the idea is intended, Postoffice Box 1539, Chicago, Ill. For instance, address ideas for "The Gumps" to Sidney Smith. All ideas must be in by 6 p. m. Thursday following the publication of the coupon. Winners will be announced in THE TRIBUNE the second Sunday following.

6. Originality of the ideas, neatness and clarity of expression will count.

7. All manuscripts and ideas submitted in this contest or competition become the absolute property of The Tribune company, and, without any consideration other than that provided in this contest, may be used by The Tribune company as it sees fit.

Doyle Gets Easy Sailing for John W. Rainey's Seat

Smooth sailing for Thomas A. Doyle, Democratic nominee for Congressman from the Fourth district, was made still smoother yesterday by withdrawal of L. J. Rodney, Republican nominee. The district is overwhelmingly Democratic anyway, but now Doyle's only opponent is H. W. Eshelman, a socialist, who received one vote in the primary. The seat is the vacancy left by the death of John W. Rainey.

The bar primary of the Lawyers' association of Illinois on judicial candidates in the election of Nov. 6 will begin at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning. All the lawyers in Cook county are eligible to vote at the association's rooms in the City Hall Square building. Voting will continue until Friday.

Dever Names Harrison as Art Commission's Head

Former Mayor Carter H. Harrison was named by Mayor Dever yesterday as chairman of the municipal commission for the encouragement of art. Adams, Palette and Chisel club; William O. Goodman, Friends of American Art; Frank V. Dudley, Painters and Sculptors; Emil R. Zettler, Society of Artists; Frank G. Logan, Art institute; Charles H. Burkholder, Art institute.

U. S. PROSPERITY STRIDES AHEAD; STATE IN STEP

Roads, Buildings, Steel Are Big Factors.

shortage of common labor; large shortage of experienced farm hands.

Rock Island-Moline district — Demand for labor very good. Building lively.

Dixon—Scarcity of farm hands. All plants are running; a milk plant and local wire factory operating overtime.

INDIANA

General—Building for this year will far exceed 1922. Demand for steel products slackened, but sufficient orders were booked to keep the mills at capacity well into the coming spring.

Indianapolis—More demand for factory laborers; other labor fully employed. Merchants and wholesalers report increased business. Large amount of building.

South Bend—Slight shortage of building trades workers.

Calumet industrial district—Shortage of workers in the steel industry. A large tube company at Gary is constructing a $15,000,000 plant. Increased employment in automobile and accessory plants.

MICHIGAN

General—Majority of manufacturers are increasing pay rolls for fall and winter production. There is need for a great many miners in Houghton and Keweenaw counties. A Detroit automobile manufacturer has just purchased 400,000 acres in the upper peninsula of this state with a lumbering outfit.

Detroit industrial district—Sufficient employment here for the skilled mechanics, but not for other classes of labor. Shortage of metal finishers. The automobile industry September output greater than that of August. Large building program continues.

Grand Rapids—Shortage of skilled laborers and a surplus of common labor. All plants are working, some overtime.

Flint—The new plant of a large automobile company, to employ 3,000, will start production with 200 cars per day soon. Local labor supply is insufficient.

Muskegon—Slight let-up in employment. One plant has released about 500 to 600 workers temporarily. Foundries are working overtime.

Marquette—Shortage of workers in the lumbering industry.

WISCONSIN

General—Employment sagged this month just enough so that competition for labor ceased. The large steel producers report that they are having no trouble in securing the greater number of men necessary to put into effect the eight hour shift.

Milwaukee industrial district—Slight letup in demand for laborers and construction workers. The demand for help in the metal trades has kept up, but in the building trades, outside of a small demand for carpenters, no shortage exists. Shoe factories and woodworking factories show a slackening. Shortage of farm help.

Racine—General conditions improving. The majority of pay rolls are full. Men unable to secure work here are finding employment in the industrial communities north and south of here.

Kenosha—No shortage or surplus of workers here. All plants full time.

Ashland—Shortage of workers on building construction and road work. A blast furnace has temporarily closed here, affecting 150 men, account lack of orders. All other plants are operating on full time.

Green Bay—A surplus of common labor exists here. Knitting factories busy. Paper mills running part time. Some machine shops are working night and day.

Oshkosh—Shortage of building trades laborers, factory hands for woodworking plants, farm hands, and common labor in this city.

OHIO

General — Building conditions throughout the state are in good shape and indications are that same will continue until weather conditions force a slowing up in this industry. While in the rubber and automobile accessories manufacturing industries some slackening of work was noticeable in the last thirty or sixty days, though indications now point to a movement upward. Steel industry is holding its own and has enough to put into effect the eight hour day.

MINNESOTA

General — Industrial and employment conditions excellent. Demand good for men in northern lumber camps. A shortage of men to work on farms by the month is apparent, however. Building mechanics plentiful. Iron mines in northern Minnesota employing normal forces.

KANSAS

General—Employment continues satisfactory. Eighty per cent of estimated unemployed are engaged in part time work. Strong call for general farm help. With the exception of soap factories, oil refineries and soda ash plants, industries generally operating on a normal basis.

Kansas City—Small surplus of packing plant labor. Strong call anticipated within two weeks for corn huskers and apple pickers.

IOWA

General—Industrial and employment situation throughout the state satisfactory. Meat packing industry employing capacity forces.

Des Moines—Road construction continues to draw heavily on common labor, and building operations in this city remain brisk, although mechanics are a little more plentiful than last month.

Sioux City—Meat packing plants show capacity forces on pay rolls. Surplus of common labor as result of influx of harvest workers from the north.

NEBRASKA

General—Meat packing, railroads, and other major industries generally show normal forces at work. Building is especially brisk.

Omaha—Many migratory laborers congregating here, although corn husking and other general farm activities should absorb practically all of these within another two or three weeks. Skilled labor still at a premium. Clerical help, especially male, in good demand; also domestics.

CUBAN REFORMS BY CUBANS NOW COOLIDGE'S HOPE

U. S. Direct Action Seem Last Resort.

BY GRAFTON WILCOX.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 13.—(Special.)—While President Coolidge is keenly appreciative of the obligation of the American government toward Cuba and would not hesitate to intervene in the affairs of the island republic, if necessary, it became known today that he and Secretary of State Hughes are counting on the development of an enlightened public opinion among the Cuban people which shall act as a check upon graft and a powerful factor for reform.

Approve Crowder Program.

When President Zayas came into power he gave his unqualified indorsement to the reform program which had been urged by Maj. Gen. Enoch H. Crowder, now ambassador to Cuba. Administration officials believed there was to be little difficulty in putting through the reforms, regarded as necessary for the salvation of Cuba.

Since that time, however, Ambassador Crowder has encountered numerous difficulties, including many evidences of wabbling on the part of Zayas. It is admitted there have been times when it seemed that intervention was inevitable.

There is no disposition on the part of the Coolidge administration to shirk responsibility with respect to Cuba, but officials are anxious to see the Cubans work out their own destiny without undue activity on the part of this government.

Expects Political Jeanup.

President Coolidge and his advisers, however, believe a powerful group of Cuban public opinion is being developed, which, if given an opportunity, can be depended upon to clean up Cuban politics.

For the first time in many years, it is asserted, leading Cubans have openly declared for the reforms Ambassador Crowder has been advocating. All over Cuba organizations are being formed which have for their platform the purification of Cuban public life. The recent veterans' movement, it is declared, is only one phase of this development.

Characteristic of the declarations of these reformers is a statement by Carlos Peres Diaz, a prominent Cuban of Matanzas, which was received here through official channels today.

"It seems that there exists in our country a spirit of corruption that is trying to teach our young people to hate the North American on account of the Platt amendment," the statement declares. "We must understand that this is anti-patriotic and also simple.

Defends Platt Amendment.

"This appendix to our constitution, the Platt amendment, is an indissoluble chain that will bind us together forever to that great American nation, and those who are trying to break it will lose their time or will die waiting for it.

"The Platt amendment is our safeguard against the crafty fellows that would like to be owners of our lives and property and cause us to suffer in the same way that our sister republics have suffered.

"The Platt amendment, like the criminal laws, is written for malicious politicians and not for honest men, and having been written for this class of people, why do we have to hate those, our best friends, who only desire our welfare?

"We used to live in what was tantamount to a cesspool. Even our best families did not know anything about hygiene. We were saturated with an unhealthy odor. There were no sanitary facilities in private or public houses. And the North Americans made us be clean and we owe to them the sanitation we have.

"We had no schools nor ways of communications. Our country was only a factory of the Spanish government.

Yellow Fever Frequent.

"Yellow fever decimated all foreigners, who looked upon this country with horror.

"All corrupting influences, such as the lottery and cock fighting, disappeared when our friend from the north intervened.

"Such good friends, after having established a very good system of public instruction, taking to the United States free of charge a considerable number of the teachers of our grammar schools, so that they could learn the advantage of their methods of teaching; after having organized our government and a good police force, both rural and municipal, they gave us our country free of debt and disease.

"But since that date, 1902, everything has been going backwards, but if it were not for this Platt amendment we would be in a worse condition than we were when a colony of Spain.

"Nevertheless in spite of the great truths there are smart young fellows, but without reflection, who hate these real benefactors of humanity, to whom we owe all we have.

"Poor Cuba, if the United States does not save us from the works of our entrapa."

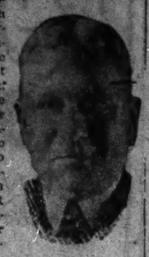
PAINT MAKERS WILL OPEN CONVENTION IN DRAKE NEXT TUESDAY



LEWIS R. ATWOOD.

Lewis R. Atwood of Louisville, Ky., is president of the National Paint, Oil, and Varnish association which opens its thirty-sixth annual convention at the Drake hotel next Tuesday night. "Paint Up and Be Cheerful" is the slogan of the manufacturers, who are attempting to expand the painting season from one of eight months to a season the year 'round. A freshly painted home, they claim, makes wide awake, happier inmates.

"The production of paint and varnish in the United States has doubled since 1921," Mr. Atwood declared. "It amounts to a half billion dollars' worth of business every year. There are 250,000 journeymen painters in the country. When they work they make an average of $8 a day. But there are four months a year when they are idle. With vocational schools, the help of the unions, and lower prices during the off season, we are hoping to teach the public to reserve interior painting for the winter months."

The National Association of Varnish Manufacturers and the Paint Manufacturers' National Association of the United States began their conventions Monday and Tuesday respectively.

FILIPINOS WANT CANADA SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT

BY WALTER WILGUS.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1923: By The Chicago Tribune.]

MANILA, Oct. 13.—Representative Juan Lunas, one of the coalition leaders, stated today that the Philippine legislature, which opens on Oct. 16, will deliberately pass bills which it knows that Gov. Gen. Leonard Wood will veto, thereupon repassing them by two-thirds majority.

The Jones law provides that in such a case the repassed bill will go to Washington for confirmation. The object of the legislature, according to Mr. Lunas, is to get a ruling from Washington on the extent of Gov. Wood's veto power, it being the contention of the Filipinos that Gov. Wood is not empowered to veto matters pertaining to internal affairs in the Philippines.

Prepare to Bait Wood.

Mr. Lunas already has drawn up three bills on internal affairs which he states he knows that Gov. Wood will be forced to veto. The bills will be presented immediately after the opening of the legislature.

Mr. Lunas also announced that the legislature will try to cut the import duties on foreign goods. American goods now have the advantage of being admitted practically duty free.

Filipino government leaders are preparing to launch a decisive campaign in the United States for the solution of the Philippine problem, no matter what form the solution takes, according to a recent statement of Manuel Roxas, speaker of the house.

Change of Demand.

Reports current at the last two meetings indicate that the Filipinos may abandon their demand for complete and absolute independence in favor of the dominion form of government, corresponding to that of Canada.

It is believed that Gov. Wood's ambition is to arrive at a settlement as the crowning act of his career before leaving the island. Mr. Roxas' statement indicates that the Filipinos possibly will be receptive to an offer of some solution which will give them internal control, perhaps including a Filipino premier responsible to the local legislature.

This is the first time that any leading Filipino has come out squarely for a settlement without annexing thereto a demand for complete independence.

Sunday School Parade to Open Children's Week

The first day of Children's week will be observed this afternoon with a parade and open air demonstration by members of Protestant Sunday schools in the district west of Douglas park. Starting at 24th street and Lawndale avenue, they will march to 25th street and Ridgeway avenue, where there will be speaking and community singing and music by the Salvation Army's staff band. Dr. S. A. McCollam and the Rev. E. L. Reiner will talk.

WIFE SLAYS HUSBAND.

A quarrel Thursday night between man and wife, during which the latter shot her husband, had its sequel yesterday when Adolph Kozma, colored, of 3346 East 24th street, died in the county hospital.

Scholle's Good Furniture

Imported French Commode in mahogany and tulip wood inlaid with other rare woods, trimmed with ormolu mounts and fitted with French marble top.....$350.00
Hand decorated Secretary in red Chinese lacquer.....$475.00

THIS is for those who are expecting to buy furniture now or in the near future. Anybody may read it, even if you have all the furniture you want; but it is chiefly intended for those who are going to buy soon.

You don't have to buy furniture here; but before you buy, you'd do well to come and see what we have to offer, because we have much more than simply fine merchandise for you. The "more" that we offer isn't a thing to be measured or looked at; it doesn't cost you anything, and we make no definite profit on it.

We offer you our services in helping you buy. That means, primarily, having the sort of goods you ought to buy; Scholle quality. It means charging prices for such quality as are fair for you to pay, and fair to us to get; there's a point, in prices, at which our interests and yours are almost identical. It means giving you the best advice and co-operation, in your buying, that we can possibly give; putting your interest before us all the time as the best means of taking care of ours.

It means giving you an assurance of satisfaction, or money back. We don't expect you to be dissatisfied; we want to protect you against it.

WALTON BURIES WAR ON KLAN IN BATTLE FOR JOB

Bids for Senate Votes to Avert Impeachment.

Oklahoma City, Okla., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—His crusade against the Ku Klux Klan completely lost sight of while a battle for Democratic political supremacy sweeps through Oklahoma, Gov. Jack Walton today began bidding for votes that would save him from expulsion by the state senate.

His enemies charged that in ousting trusted but unpopular lieutenants from office and bestowing appointments upon Republicans he was attempting to corral senatorial votes to halt his removal from office.

Hold Secret Sessions.

The house of representatives investigating committee with a membership of twenty-five lawmakers manifestly stacked against Walton, with not one of his supporters on it, began holding star chamber hearings. Demands that the sessions be open to the public went unheeded.

The first witness was Aldrich Blake, legal adviser to the governor, who was summarily ousted by Walton last night. Dr. E. T. Bynum, state banking commissioner, fired along with Blake, was also interrogated. Local bankers were subpoenaed to reveal the accounts of Walton and his political followers.

Officials and telegraph companies were called to tell how much money had been wired to Walton's defense fund by anti-klan sympathizers in eastern states.

Blake Issues Statement.

Blake issued a statement making it appear he had been ousted because former United States Senator Thomas P. Gore, whose secretary Blake used to be, gave Walton a tongue lashing when addressing the legislature Thursday.

Unbiased observers said Walton rid himself of Blake and Bynum because both were unpopular with the Farmer-Reconstruction league, and Walton aimed to solicit its fifteen votes in the lower house and four in the senate to save himself.

"Further than a wicked abuse of the state's resources in providing for his friends with reckless abandon, Gov. Walton has had no policies," was the bitterly resentful statement of Dr. Bynum.

Blake "In the Way."

Blake, who concededly initiated Walton's drive against the Ku Klux Klan said:

"It became rapidly apparent that Gov. Walton could not rally the anti-Klan forces. Retreat was necessary. His advisers convinced him that my fight against the Klan was not in the best interests of his administration.

The committee, determined to show that Walton's enmity to the Klan is not sincere, has obtained a stenographer's report of an address he made to the legislature March 21. This reveals Walton as having said:

"I want to say to the legislators here that you are our legislators—that you are my legislators, no matter whether you are Ku Klux, Tigereyes (meaning drinkers of bootlegger liquor), Democrats or Republicans. When you come back to Oklahoma City I want you to call in at my office."

It was announced by the Anti-Walton managers that the governor's impeachment would be speedily voted for fear Walton might frustrate their plans by judiciously distributing pardons and paroles among lawyers in the legislature and appointing to office friends of others whose support he seeks.

GAS DEATH CALLED ACCIDENT.

A coroner's jury yesterday decided that the death by gas of Mrs. Nellie Wightman, 2512 North Lawndale avenue, was the result of accident.

CANADA TO HELP STOCK ZOO

Type of buffaloes to be sent by Canada to aid in stocking the Chicago zoo in the forest preserve.

Promises Specimens

Co-operation of the Canadian government in stocking Chicago Zoological gardens in the Forest Preserve was assured yesterday by a communication to John T. McCutcheon, president of the zoo, stating that a donation of groups of animals and birds flourishing in the Canadian wilds would be made.

Among these specimens are to be a number of buffalo from the famous Wainwright herd. About 1,200 members of this herd are to be slaughtered in November in order that a pure strain may be maintained. Mr. McCutcheon has been invited to be present at the time and pick specimens for shipment to Chicago.

George Frederick Morse, director of the Chicago zoo, declared the buffalo, reared in the mountains, prairies, and timber lands of the far north, will thrive and multiply here. They will be permitted to roam at will in the ample grounds of the zoo.

CAPT. MANEYROL, FRENCH GLIDER, KILLED IN CRASH

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

HYTHE, Eng., Oct. 13.—[Tribune Radio.]—Capt. Alex Maneyrol, French glider, who won the English gliding contest at Fordhill last year, was killed at Lympne today when his motor glider crashed when he was at a height of 120 feet. He was trying to beat M. W. Piercey's altitude record of 14,400 feet.

The competition finished today with the awarding of the prizes as follows:

The Daily Mail $5,000 and the Duke of Sutherland's $2,500 prizes for gasoline consumption were split between J. H. James and Lieut. Longton, both of whom made 87.5 miles on one gallon of gas. The $2,500 speed prize went to Capt. MacMillian, who covered the course of twenty-five miles at 76.1 miles an hour. The $1,500 total mileage and reliability prize went to B. Hinckler, who flew 1,000 miles in an Avro monoplane. The $1,000 altitude prize went to M. W. Piercey, in an Aiec monoplane, who ascended 14,400 feet.

MOTORMAN IN CRASH DIES.

Muncie, Ind., Oct. 13.—An interurban accident near Eaton six months ago, in which two men were killed, claimed a third victim today when Luther Simmons, 60, motorman on the car, died. Simmons was the oldest employé of the Indiana Union Traction company. Physicians say death was caused by worry and grief over the tragedy.

OKLAHOMA TOWN SWEPT BY WALL OF FLOOD WATER

Enid, Okla., Oct. 13.—All stores were flooded and numerous residences were partly submerged by a nine foot wall of water which swept through parts of Woodward, Okla., today when the north Canadian river overflowed from recent heavy rains, according to reports reaching here over crippled wires tonight.

Scores of persons are said to have been made homeless, although no lives are believed to have been lost.

Streams in this vicinity have been swelled to past flood stage by heavy rains which have fallen continuously since early last evening. Information obtained from a number of points before means of communication were destroyed by the swirling torrents, described the worst flood in the history of western Oklahoma.

Railroad traffic is demoralized. Nearly 100 bridges have been carried away and sections of track in a number of places are out.

INDIANA SOCIETY GIVES DEFREES REAL WASHBOWL

Some 300 members of the Indiana society of Chicago called on Joseph H. Defrees at his home in the Windermere hotel last night and surprised him with a housewarming party.

It seems that Mr. Defrees, who lived in Goshen, Ind., before he came here in 1888 to become a leading lawyer and later president of the United States chamber of commerce and numerous other large organizations, has none of the old Hoosier conveniences in the Windermere, which he built. So the "boys" just dropped in to present him with carpet slippers and a foot scraper and a wash bowl and a few other household comforts.

Wilbur Nesbit acted as toastmaster, supervising the presentation, after dinner and stereoptican views of the old Goshen church choir had been disposed of.

11 STATES UNITE IN MEETING HERE ON OIL POLICIES

Attorneys General Seek Uniform Action.

Eleven attorneys general from as many different states, assistant representing the chief prosecutors of two other states, and Assistant Attorney General Seymour of the United States government, and Gilbert E. Roe, attorney for the United States senate committee which investigated oil, will meet in Chicago tomorrow to outline a concerted program with reference to gasoline—its supply, distribution, and price.

They will attempt to decide what each state should do individually, what they should do collectively, and how and when it should be done to be most effective.

This probably will be an attempt at correlated action by a larger number of states and on a larger scale than ever attempted before on any subject. During the war the President obtained united state action, but that was under the leadership of the head of the nation, when its interests were in peril. This effort comes from the states themselves.

Will Take Up Pittsburgh Plus.

While in Chicago the attorneys general of several middle western states also will confer at length on "Pittsburgh Plus." Four states already have combined to make a concerted attack on this trade practice, which it is claimed has greatly and unnecessarily increased the cost of steel products in the middle west.

Regarding gasoline the object of the conference is to find a plan by which the states can force fair competition in the production, refining, and distribution of petroleum products as well as a fair price for consumers. The plans by which the lawyers hope to gain these ends have not been given the public; it is understood that they will not be, even after the conference, if it is thought that their disclosure will interfere with getting the desired results.

These Will Attend

Those who have accepted invitations to sit around the table at the conference are:

Attorney General—	State.
Edward J. Brundage	Illinois
C. S. Spellman	Nebraska
Ben J. Gibson	Iowa

11 STATES UNITE IN MEETING HERE ON OIL POLICIES

Attorneys General Seek Uniform Action.

Eleven attorneys general from as many different states, assistant representing the chief prosecutors of two other states, and Assistant Attorney General Seymour of the United States department, and Gilbert E. Roe, attorney for the United States senate committee which investigated oil, will meet in Chicago tomorrow to outline a concerted program with reference to petroleum—its supply, distribution, and price.

They will attempt to decide what each state should do individually, what they should do collectively, and how and when it should be done to be most effective.

This probably will be an attempt at correlated action by a larger number of states and on a larger scale than ever attempted before on any subject. During the war the President obtained united state action, but that was under the leadership of the head of the nation, when its interests were in peril. This effort comes from the states themselves.

Will Take Up Pittsburgh Plus.

While in Chicago the attorneys general of several middle western states also will confer at length on "Pittsburgh Plus." Four states already have combined to make a concerted attack on this trade practice, which it is claimed has greatly and unnecessarily increased the cost of steel products in the middle west.

Regarding gasoline the object of the conference is to find a plan by which the states can force fair competition in the production, refining, and distribution of petroleum products as well as a fair price for consumers. The plans by which the lawyers hope to gain these ends have not been given the public; it is understood that they will not be, even after the conference, if it is thought that their disclosure will interfere with getting the desired results.

These Will Attend

Those who have accepted invitations to sit around the table at the conference are:

Attorney General—	State.
Edward J. Brundage	Illinois
A. G. Spellman	Nebraska
Ben J. Gibson	Iowa
Benjamin L. Ehrern	Wisconsin
Clifford L. Hilton	Minnesota
Jens Barrett	Missouri
Charles B. Griffith	Kansas
Harry H. Bowman	New Mexico
Geo. P. Short	Oklahoma
A. T. England	West Virginia
Geo. Napier	Georgia

Attorney General W. L. Walls of Wyoming will be represented by Beuty Howell and New York will be a party to the conference through Deputy Attorney General Cullen.

While the meetings probably will be held in the Hotel La Salle, unless Mayor Dever tenders the use of the city council chamber, the start-off will be a luncheon given at the Union league club tomorrow by Attorney General Brundage of Illinois.

Among prominent local men who will attend the luncheon are United States Judges Evan A. Evans and James H. Wilkerson, District Attorney Edwin A. Olson, President Walter Dill Scott of Northwestern university, Charles S. Cutting, Amos C. Miller, Weymouth Kirkland, William H. Sexton, Elias H. Sabath, Judson F. Stone, and W. Rufus Abbott.

Thurlow G. Essington, candidate for governor of Illinois, also will be there.

SISTERS SELECT BURIAL CLOTHES, THEN TAKE LIVES

Asbury Park, N. J., Oct. 13.—The bodies of two sisters, Mrs. Gussie M. Durr and Miss Tillie Bang, were found today on a cot in their home in Ocean Grove with the jets of a gas stove open. Nearby lay notes indicating a suicide pact.

The women, both in the late forties, had often expressed the fear that one might die before the other.

On the dining room table were found two bundles of clothes, each bearing the initials of the sister for whom they apparently had been selected for burial.

INDIANA JOINS 5 STATES FIGHTING SANITARY DIST.

Madison, Wis., Oct. 13.—Indiana will join Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, Pennsylvania and Ohio in their fight before the United States Supreme court to enjoin the sanitary district of Chicago from diverting excess waters from Lake Michigan into the Chicago drainage canal.

Attorney General U. S. Lesh, Indiana, has informed Attorney General Ekern of Wisconsin that he will take an active part in the fight. The case is now pending on the appeal to the Supreme court of the United States by the sanitary district from the judgment entered by Judge Carpenter in June of this year. The judgment forbids further diversion of lake waters, but it does not go into effect until June, 1924. This was done so that the drainage district might have an opportunity to appeal before the order became effective.

A conference was held in Washington, D. C., recently of the attorneys general of all states participating.

Under the will, trust funds of $50,000 are established for the benefit of two granddaughters, Louise Grommes Rehm and Jane Philipina Brand, who will receive the principal when they are 35 years old.

FINDS CHARITY FADING AS SOCIAL INSURANCE RISES

Lightens Public Burden, Welfare Worker Says.

BY LOUISE JAMES BARGELT.

"Twenty-five years ago the first book was published in this country on social insurance, telling how the different countries of Europe were handling this project; insurance against industrial accidents, against unemployment, against old age and sickness. This same book was unable to quote a single example of social insurance in this country," John A. Lapp said yesterday afternoon at the Big Sisters' first quarterly meeting at Recital hall, Fine Arts building.

Mr Lapp is director of the social action department of the National Catholic welfare council, and he went on to say how, ten years later, a phenomenal wave of legislation swept our country in regard to this same social insurance with forty-three different state legislatures enacting industrial insurance of various kinds.

Poverty Giving Way.

"One hundred years ago people were apt to regard most evils as the act of some punishing providence, and to think that they were not remediable. We know now that isn't so. There is hardly an existing evil resulting in dire and abject poverty which is not preventable.

"We are cutting down death rates today as never before in the history of the world. We are doing the same with sick rates. And we are going on to the prevention of sickness.

"Our recruits to poverty come almost entirely from four sources. Sickness and death of the breadwinner, unemployment and accident. If we can arrange a social insurance to provide against these calamitous happenings, distributing the burden so that it will not fall wholly on the afflicted, we shall go most of the way towards doing away with so-called charities.

Charity Calls Falling Off.

"It is admitted that in Chicago, as well as in other large cities, hospital charitable work is growing less each year. This is largely due to the fact that the average workingman who twenty years ago had to depend on charity and dispensary in case of any accident, now is insured by the workman's compensation act, and does not slip into the rank of the poverty stricken when some calamity befalls him.

"Business could not be run without insurance, but we try to carry one of the largest burdens man is asked to bear, the burden of the sick and the poor and the dependent, without taking any measures to prepare against it."

"CAVEMAN FLIRT" GETS FINE.

John Dittman, 18 years old, of 3044 North Keeler avenue, was fined $100 and costs yesterday when Miss Emily Janek, 2947 Carver street, testified he had accosted her on the street, twisted her arm, and pushed her off the sidewalk.

ALL READY FOR TAG DAY

Mrs. William D. Shivers is one of the 5,000 authorized representatives of established Chicago children's charities who will tag citizens tomorrow as a reward for donations to the fund being raised under the auspices of the Children's Benefit league. Mayor Dever on Saturday officially proclaimed the tag day, praising its purpose and urging all citizens to contribute as much as possible. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

JAPAN TO SEEK FOREIGN LOANS FOR REBUILDING

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

TOKIO, Oct. 13.—The Japanese finance minister in a statement to THE TRIBUNE today asserted Japan would float foreign loans for the purpose of purchasing foreign supplies to repair the damage done by the earthquake in September.

He said the government would not appoint big Japanese firms to act as purchasing agents, and would only buy sufficient quantities to control the market so as to prevent cornering and profiteering, thus permitting ample scope for private business to make a fair margin of profit.

The reduction in the government's income consequent to the devastation will be 200,000,000 yen ($100,000,000) this year. Fortunately the morale of the people is good, the money market is quiet, there have been no runs on the banks, and the treasury holds a surplus sufficient to meet the emergency demands.

175 VESSELS IN 24 HOURS, NEW SOO CANAL MARK

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—A new record for canal tariff was established here in the last twenty-four hours, when 175 vessels passed through the locks from 8 a. m. Friday to 8 a. m. Saturday. It is estimated that the tonnage has exceeded 750,000 tons. This record breaks all previous lockages recorded.

On July 6, 1923, the canal handled 147 boats, with a total tonnage of 676,000 tons. On July 30 there were 159 boats through the locks, but the tonnage amounted to slightly more than 450,000 tons.

During the hours of the big rush Saturday 137 boats passed through the American locks and thirty-eight through the Canadian locks. This new record brought the vessels to the locks at the average of one every eight minutes.

Paris Love Affairs Place Aid Society in Need of Aid

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

PARIS, Oct. 13.—The American Aid society, formed to aid penniless Americans in distress in France, is in danger of disruption following scandals involving two of its officials, together with a shortage in the funds. One of the officials was forced to resign because of his marriage to a Latin quarter habitue, while an unfortunate love affair was responsible for the separation of the other from the society.

Radium Is Restoring Health to Thousands

The wonderful curative power of Radium has been known for years. However, the benefits of this precious health-giving substance have in the past been only within the means of persons of wealth.

Since the invention of Degnen's Radio-Active Solar Pad, any man or woman, poor or rich, can afford this treatment which offers so much relief from suffering and disease.

Degnen's Radio-Active Solar Pad is worn next to the body day and night. It pours a constant stream of radio-active energy into the system while you work, play or sleep, helping to build up weakened nerves and tissues to a strong, healthy condition. It creates a vigorous circulation of blood, thus removing congestion, which is the real cause of most diseases.

To prove that this remarkable treatment can do for you, we will send our appliance on trial with the understanding that we will not charge you a cent if it fails to give satisfactory results. This offer is open to any person who has pain of any kind, nerve weakness, high blood pressure, stomach, kidney or liver complaint, bladder trouble, or disease of the lungs or heart.

No matter what your ailment or how long you have had it, we will gladly let you try the appliance at our risk. Write today for free literature giving complete information. Radium Appliance Co., 1409 Bradbury Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

EINSTEIN THEORY ON EARTH CHANGE IS BEING TESTED

Seek to Learn if Diameter Shrinks in Travel.

BY SELBY MAXWELL.

Einstein believes the earth loses about five inches of its diameter as it travels through the sky around the sun. The loss is not distributed all around it, he thinks, but occurs only in the line that we are traveling. He thinks that if the earth's speed could somehow be increased to the velocity of light, 186,000 miles a second, this globe would flatten out until it was thinner than a piece of paper, and would be the flat land people thought existed before the days of Columbus.

The University of Chicago is now making the most elaborate experiment yet performed to test this theory. It is repeating the famous experiment of Michelson and Morley, on which Einstein bases a large part of his theory of relativity.

Test with Beams of Light.

The experiment consists in sending beams of light out in various directions, and reflecting them back again into the eye of the observer. One would ordinarily think that if light beams were sent at random, and returned, that there would be some direction where they would be going against the motion of the earth, and would be accordingly retarded. But no such effect has ever been observed.

Einstein says that no effect is to be expected. There is a retarding of the beams, he admits, but the earth shrinks also, and by such an amount as to neutralize exactly the light change. Hence, he says, we can never tell exactly how big we are, because our sizes change with the way we travel.

Changes Comparatively Small.

For ordinary purposes, the change in size is small, only about one part in ten million. But in electricity, radio, chemistry and astronomy, where great speeds and long times are involved, Einstein's changes cannot be neglected. It makes little difference whether Einstein's theory is true or not in the work of setting a telephone pole in the ground but a great deal of difference in the conversation over the wires that are hung on it. This is the reason scientists are sparing no pains to find out if Einstein's theories are true.

LONGSHOREMEN STRIKING IN N. O., WIN IN COURT

New Orleans, La., Oct. 13.—Judge Boatner, in civil district court, today made permanent an injunction obtained by striking harbor workers against the dock board to prevent enforcement of a rule of the board barring strikers from the wharves. The court declared there was nothing unlawful in abandoning work to obtain higher wages, that the docks are public places, and that "the ex-employes have the right to enter them and communicate with men at work in lawful efforts to persuade them to join their ranks in an economic struggle."

Another famous North American specialty — a big portion of Chicken a la King — 65 cents

Even though you are willing to pay double our price—and most places you will pay at least that, usually more—you can't get any finer Chicken a la King. It is prepared and cooked by a Chef who knows how fine dishes should be prepared. Into it goes the tenderest, sweetest meat from Premium milk-fed Chickens—no old roosters or hens—fine, fresh mushrooms, imported sweet peppers, and lots of real cream. And yet a big portion—usually enough for two people—costs only 65 cents.

And Chicken a la King is only one example of the big savings you can get the benefit of by "serving yourself" at the North American Restaurant. And you make a further saving because here, there are no waiters to be "tipped," and there is no "cover charge."

When you know that you can get the finest food in the land, at low prices, by "serving yourself" at the North American, is there any reason for dining elsewhere?

Blue Point Cocktail: 7—not the usual half-dozen—on the half shell with cocktail sauce 25c

NOTES TO LIGHT MAAS SHOOTING, STATE'S THEORY

Hint Wealthy New Yorker Involved in Scrape.

New York, Oct. 13.—[Special.]—Judge James F. Walsh, prosecuting attorney of Greenwich, Conn., said tonight that he planned a careful perusal of the letters taken from the home of Mrs. Ida M. Leslie, Sound Beach widow, whose guest, Milton M. Maas, wealthy chemist, was shot twice by one of three men who attacked Mrs. Leslie at her home on Thursday night.

The attorney refused to discuss the contents of the letters he had read. He was also silent when asked about reports that some of the missives were penned by "a New York millionaire, nationally known."

Maid Describes Shooting.

It was said that only a few letters were among the batch of stuff taken by the police from Mrs. Leslie's home in Ledge road after she had been seized but not harmed by the mysterious three intruders and Mr. Maas had been shot down without warning.

A supplementary account of what took place at the pretentious home of the widow came today from Kathleen Fox, maid in the household. Mrs. Leslie's account of the affair was that she stepped out to give her two pet Pekingese dogs an airing and that she was seized at once by three young men who had concealed themselves back of the shrubbery near the porch. They covered her mouth and assured her that no harm was intended. Mrs. Leslie screamed, however, and Mr. Maas, responding to the call, was shot as he appeared on the porch.

Maas Shot Twice.

The maid said that she also heard the scream and ran into the hallway and out to the porch. As she approached the veranda she noticed that Mr. Maas was struggling with a younger man.

The men parted for a second and the intruder fired the shot that passed through the chemist's left shoulder. Mr. Maas half reeled and the man fired his second shot, this bullet doing little harm.

The pharaonic kings possessed works of handicraft and cabinetry unsurpassed even to this day. But the private citizen of today may possess artistic treasures combining the highest development in cabinetry to please the eye and the most harmonious music to delight the ear.

WEALTH— How to Attain It

"Bills, bills, bills," sighed Jim Richards as he surveyed the accumulation of mail on the first of the month. "Margaret," he said, turning to his wife, "it seems impossible for us to save money. Our income and outgo balance altogether too well. But, for the life of me, I can't tell where our money goes."

"Well, I'm doing my best, Jim."

"I know you are, my dear," he said. "But it's discouraging, to say the least. I'm going to see whether there isn't some way of planning our expenditures so that we can really save money."

Richards began making inquiries. To his surprise he learned that many of his acquaintances were using a budget plan with success. But it was not until he mentioned the matter to his friend Clark that he really got the information he desired.

"I've got the very thing you want," was Clark's enthusiastic remark. "I'm not good at keeping figures and if there's anything I don't like to do it's keeping a complicated and confusing expense record. The book I use, 'WEALTH—How to Attain It,' contains a plan that is simplicity itself. Yet it's surprisingly thorough. It only takes a few minutes a day to keep it up. I've tried it for two months and already I've saved more money than I ever did before in the same length of time.

"This book provides a complete expense record for every month, and a summary for the year. It's easy to keep, because the page explaining how to use the record lists alphabetically the various items of expense and how they are to be entered. Then, too, it contains suggested budgets for incomes from $125 a month to $50,000 a year. It suggests methods for accumulating money, offers some practical investment suggestions, and provides a complete record for your investments.

"Get this record book, Jim, and you'll save money more easily than you ever did before. I know, because I've tried it."

"WEALTH—How to Attain It," size 9¼x11¼ inches, is now in use by thousands who never before had followed a definite plan for saving money. Practical, simple, thorough, it has demonstrated its usefulness in stopping leaks and accumulating reserve funds. They follo the ball in cellike fashion, while t tackling and blocking was about fiercest one can imagine.

Use Varied Attack.

It was a combination of the cl and open attack which demoralized cadets. Despite the known streng of the Army line, the Booster ba tore through on delayed bucks, slid the tackles, and, when the seconda defenses came up to help the forwa wall, forward passes were called fr commission. The heady work of Ha ry Stuhldreher, Notre Dame quart back, had much to do with the for attack which was launched behind u balanced lines and from a backfie shift.

Although the Army eleven was o of much vaunted strength, the visito went after the game from the fir sound of the whistle. After the ga was a couple of minutes old it was e dent a battle would result, as t mighty Hewitt, who played full ba on the Pittsburgh eleven of the l three years, was unable to penetra the Notre Dame forward wall for c sistent gains. The same was true the other Army backs, while Garbis the roving Army center, was k guessing continually.

While Notre Dame was wonderf on offense, it was just as strong defensively. An idea of this streng may be gained from the fact that t Army did not get within the visitor thirty yard line. New York, Oct. 13.—[Special.]—A slashing attack, combining formations of the close and open variety, gave Notre Dame a victory over West Point today at Ebbets' field, 13 to 0, in one of the hardest and, at the same time, most cleanly played games in the ten years of football relations between the two institutions.

The result, although partially expected by loyal supporters of the middle west eleven, was a severe shock to followers of the game in this section. The Army had been rated one of the best in the east, but the crafty, nimble and alert Notre Dame players took advantage of everything. They followed the ball in catlike fashion, while their tackling and blocking was about the fiercest one can imagine.

IN the WAKE of the NEWS

ZEV VS. PAPYRUS.

ZEV, champion 3 year old of the American turf on performances to date, will meet Papyrus, English Derby winner, in a match race for $100,000 purse money over the derby route of one and one-half miles next Saturday in what The Wake hopes will be only the first in a series of such international turf tests.

This race is attracting world-wide attention. Whether it proves a keen contest with the two champions racing stride for stride through the stretch to a nose finish or whether it results in a hollow victory for one of the equine rivals, it is the most spectacular event offered turf lovers in years. It reflects credit on the originators of the idea who brought their plans to fruition despite many difficulties.

National pride, even were we doubtful, would prompt The Wake to pick the American representative. Back of that pride, however, stands the conviction that it will take a wonderful race horse to follow the sizzling early pace of Zev through the first mile and still have enough left to challenge at the finish.

Moreover, since the days when Tod Sloan went to England and taught the conservative English jockeys something, we've had a feeling our boys were superior. So we look for dande to outride or outgeneral Denoghue, England's premier pilot. This again may be mere partisanship.

We do not think shipment and climate will handicap Papyrus as much as the hard American tracks contrasted with the turf of England to which he is accustomed.

We admire the sporting spirit of Papyrus' owner in shipping to this country, and if the son of Tracery is victor, we bespeak for him full honors for his performance.

Whatever happens, let's have another meeting of the best American and best English 3 year olds next year, raced on British soil.

A Day in October.

So cool, so calm, so bright the day!
The swallow wings its southward way—
Through quietness that broods o'er all,
We seem to hear a plaintive call.
Adame the wooded hills, and gay
The scarlet sumac by the way,
While goldenrod lifts high its spray.
On banks where purple asters sway,
Faint sounds come to our ears at times,
Like some far-distant softened chimes.
And over painted tree and bush,
There rests a universal hush.
And ever, o'er each hill and vale,
October weaves her golden trail.

Poker Variations.

Friend Harve: With cooler nights coming on, you may need a few variations for your neighborhood game. Here's the Ravenswood variety: Dealer deals each player one card face down, deals each player one card face up. Players then have privilege of asking for from three to five cards at ten cents each, discarding all over five. The player with high exposed card starts the betting and trouble. It makes a lively small game. What have other Helpers to offer?

Touchdowns—Marks, McElvain. Goal from touchdown—Williams. Referee—J. H. Nichols (Oberlin). Field judge—J. J. Maloney. Head linesman—F. H. Cravens.

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—Balked in two attempts to win in the last three minutes of play, once by a penalty and once when a drop kick was declared wide by officials after the Purple rooters en masse had thought the field goal made, Northwestern university gridders went down to their first defeat of the season here today at the hands of University of Indiana, 7 to 6. It was the opening game of the Big Ten title race for the two elevens.

There were some 800 Northwestern rooters grouped in one section of the stand, more than 500 having made the trip down from Evanston this morning, and they rose in a frenzied cheer twice in the hectic final minutes, only to be plunged into despair twice by the verdicts of the officials. Tonight the Purple host departed for home, wearied and hoarse from the futile rooting in those tense final minutes.

Hope Changed to Gloom.

It was Rae Lauder who gave the Purple fans their first false cheer. With three minutes to go, Lauder tore through the Indiana line from the 25 yard line and planted the oval behind the goal line, and the visiting hosts rose in a mighty shout, for the Northwestern battlers at the time were trailing by the single point which finally spelled defeat. But the cheers quickly changed to groans when the shrill piping of a whistle sounded and Referee P. H. Nichols took the ball back and then paced off fifteen yards penalty on the Purple for holding.

But this disappointment was nothing compared to the blow that came a moment later. After the ball had been taken back and the penalty inflicted for holding, the Purple backs drove the ball to the Crimson ten yard line and Coach Thistlethwaite sent Carleton Johnson in to replace Lauder.

Johnson fell back and his forwards braced to repel the Indiana assault while the Northwestern back booted a drop kick that appeared to pass of both schools to be between the posts. But while the tumult of shouts was still raging the officials ruled the kick wild and gave the ball to the Hoosiers, who punted out of danger. In another instant the game was over.

Couldn't Break Ingram's Men.

For the Purple the contest was a battle of disappointments, for Thistlethwaite's men had the pigskin inside of the Indiana five yard line four times but failed each time to puncture the battling Hoosier forward wall for a winning touchdown. Despite the fact that the Purple gained three times the yardage the Hoosiers advanced the oval, Coach Ingram's boys refused to break when the Evanston team came within striking distance.

Larry Marks, Hoosier right half back, put the Indiana eleven out in front in the first quarter when, after Northwestern had kicked off and an exchange of punts had been made, Marks took the ball on his 20 yard mark and twisting and tearing his way through almost the entire Purple team raced eighty yards to the Northwestern goal line. Williams drop kicked the oval over the bar for the point that gave Indiana its victory.

Graham Misses Points.

Immediately after the kickoff following the Indiana score, the Purple backs started a drive down the field, alternating off tackle drives with short end runs and passes until Capt. McElwain drove over for a touchdown on a smash off guard. With a chance to tie up the score, Alva Graham hurried and missed his attempt at a drop kick for the point which would have put the teams in a deadlock.

As expected, Capt. McElwain of the Purple outgained his backfield mates three to one, although Bob Wilmoth's showed up healthy in advancing the leather and punting until he sustained a loosened kidney in the second quarter and retired. The ends showed great improvement over last week's shooting, Wally Seidel topping the wing performers for the afternoon. Northwestern's backs tore through the Hoosier line for 18 first downs against 3 made by the Crimson.

More than 12,000 jammed the park here for the contest, and both teams brought bands to add to the noise.

JOEL DOUBTS IF PAPYRUS MEETS ZEV SATURDAY

BAR AFTERNOON VISITORS

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—[Special.]—Racing fans will be permitted to see Papyrus only in his morning workouts between now and Saturday, Trainer Jarvis announced tonight. "I have tried to give everybody a chance to see Papyrus," Trainer Jarvis said, "but, beginning tomorrow, I shall have to decline to show the horse in the afternoon. This is done in the interest of Papyrus, as we want to be ready by Saturday, and there is a lot to do between now and then."

New York, Oct. 13.—[Special.]—J. R. Joel, South African mine owner and turfman, who offered $200,000 for Papyrus after he won the Derby, predicted today that the much heralded race between Zev and Papyrus, scheduled for Oct. 20 at Belmont Park, never would be run.

Mr. Joel sailed on the Majestic today for England.

"I am going back because I don't think there will be any race," he said.

Asked to explain, he continued: "By Tuesday or Wednesday Basil Jarvis (Papyrus' trainer) will find Papyrus absolutely unfit for the contest, and I don't think that Jarvis, in the absence of Ben Irish, will risk the horse in a race."

Mal. August Belmont, chairman of the Jockey club, when informed of Mr. Joel's statement, declared that Papyrus is in excellent condition.

"All the information I can get from Trainer Jarvis is that Papyrus will be ready to race," Mal. Belmont said.

"It's all poppycock," Trainer Jarvis declared, when told of Joel's statement.

Before a crowd of more than 200, including August Belmont, president of the Jockey club and many prominent trainers, Papyrus, English Derby winner, had a good workout this morning.

The British thoroughbred went the mile and a half in 2:29 3-5.

Today, at White Sox park.

Probable pitchers—Alexander or Kaufman for the Cubs and Cvengros for the White Sox.
Tickets marked game No. 4 will be honored today.

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.

Rain of a mild but persistent nature hemmed in on the city series program yesterday and prevented the White Sox and Cubs from severing another link in their chase for the local title and some pin money? Hope for action was held out right up to within an hour of game time, but the drizzle continued and there was no crowd clamoring at the gates, so the gents in charge decided to let the affair slide.

The series will be resumed today, weather permitting, at Comiskey park and not at the Cub field, where today's attraction originally scheduled for next Tuesday. Tickets for game No. 4 will be honored, and as a big batch of this variety of guest remains should the ticket withdraw at the south side arena will be opened for business this morning. Tickets marked game No. 3 will not be good until the next game at the north side lot.

Today's pitching program will be about as it would have been yesterday. The day of rest was welcomed, however, by the gents in line for toil. Alexander, the northpaw, is slated for Grover, and rest does not hurt the little fellow.

BY HUGH FULLERTON.

New York, Oct. 13.—Probable pitchers: Hoyt for the Yankees and Bentley for the Giants. Probable score: 6 to 4, in favor of the Yankees.

New York's Yankees, stung by bad luck and worse criticism, turned on the Giants on their own grounds today and, wrecking four pitchers, broke the Giant defense and evened the series by winning, 8 to 4, in a game which never was in doubt, save for one tense instant in the eighth.

The desperate Yankees turned loose all their heavy artillery in the second inning, drove John Scott, hero of last year's series, to the showers, chased "Rosy Bill" Ryan after him in disgrace, and pummeled the offerings of Hugh McQuillan until they had amassed six runs in the one round.

Dope Is Right.

The dope indicated that the Yankees would win this game, 9 to 4—and they got eight and then loitered and failed to work for safety when in the eighth the Giants staged a wild, frantic rally in which they scored three runs, drove Bob Shawkey to shelter and forced Huggins to summon Herb Pennock, his pitching ace, to prevent further disaster. Even then the bases were filled with two out when Pennock, steadying when in [28] hole, forced Frankie Frisch to pop a fly which Everett Scott pinched in short left and ended the danger.

Another capacity crowd, which packed the stadium and was orderly, witnessed the struggle, which may prove the turning point of the series. The fans roared and screamed during the terrific assault in which the Yankees broke the seemingly impregnable defenses of the Giants, then settled back to watch a hard hitting, cleanly fought fielding game, with the ordinary plays interspersed with magnificent stops and catches.

Dugan Stars.

The greatest play, perhaps, was made by Joe Dugan, and set the multitude into a screaming frenzy. That play came just at the time when the Giants, scoreless, and fighting a forlorn hope, seemed to have a chance. A pinch runner was on first when Davy Bancroft sent a sizzling liner over third. Dugan, racing to his left, leaped, stuck up one hand, jerked down the ball, and by a lightning throw across the diamond completed a double play, and the Giants were wrecked.

The breaks seemed to run against the Giants during all those early innings, and the Yanks, to tell the truth, were a bit careful, considering an eight run lead safe, even though Shawkey was in trouble in almost every inning and escaping because the Giants were in a position where they had to keep hitting.

Breaks Favor Yanks.

It was the first time in the series that the breaks favored the Yankees, and it looked as if the luck had shifted even as the batting and the cheers of the crowd had done.

But these Giants may be down, but they are never out—at least they will not admit it, even to ah umpire. The luck was running against them steadily, the Yankees were making plays when they counted, and the eighth started with the American leaguers having eight runs, the Giants scoreless and the "Just" game at last engaged and some of them nearing home.

Then the luck showed what it could do in a game and revealed to the Yankees the fact that they cannot play home against the Giant team or negotiate opportunities.

Young, the hitting hero of the day, was up to start the round, and he beat a scalding hit to left. Emil Meusel hit sharply and straight at Scott, and

New York, Oct. 13.—That much talked of brutality of the New York Yankees asserted itself today with marked vengeance in the fourth game of the world's series, the Yanks annihilating John McGraw's Giants regardless of all his strategy. The Yanks won, 8 to 4, and the series is tied up once more, each club having two victories.

A terrific assault in the second round by the Miller Huggins' tribe put the game on ice. Two of McGraw's pitchers were knocked flat in that session as one slugging Yank after another stepped forth and knocked the cover off the ball. Six runs were tabbed up before the Giants could stop the fussing and from then on it was nothing but the Yankees. They scored another in the third and one in the fourth, after which they were content to play defense and protect their spoils.

Shawkey Gives Pitcher.

It was the veteran Bob Shawkey who was on the slab for Huggins and he was in his best style for seven innings. However, in the eighth Bob was assaulted with such force by the McGraw gang and was apparently losing his strength that Herb Pennock was summoned from the bullpen to save the game. Herb saved it all right, but was compelled to use exertion to suppress the apparently irate Giants.

All told McGraw used five pitchers to get through the game. The Yanks treated his hurlers much after the fashion of some of the National league nines during the season. As predicted, John Scott, gentleman of South Carolina, was given the initial fielding assignment, Scott was the heroic hurler of a year ago when he stopped the Yanks stone wall in one of the games, shutting them out with only four hits.

Scott and Ryan Helpless.

It wasn't that way today. John got through the first inning all right, allowing one hit by Witt and gaining much applause because of turning the unusual feat of striking out Babe Ruth on three called strikes, the Babe never once taking a swing. But Scott's never once glimmering in the second when everybody started smashing the ball. The Yanks slammed everything he served them and in the midst of it Scott bungled up a bunted ball. He looked absolutely helpless and McGraw wasted no time in getting him out of there.

Ryan Bill Ryan was called and Ryan Bill had stepped in and saved the first game. Seemed as if he was the fellow needed, but the Yanks simply murdered everything he had to offer. A couple of screaming drives bounced off the concrete in left field and the Yanks were simply tearing up the earth on the base paths. Something had to be done. It required more than the services of a strategist.

Breaks Favor Yankees.

McGraw got Ryan out of there as quickly as he could and called in Hugh McQuillan, the one who was knocked out in the second game. Hugh got along better this time and struck out the seventh, when he gave way to a pinch hitter. After that Claude Jonnard appeared on the rubber, only to be removed for a pinch hitter in the eighth, and Virgil Barnes had to come in to finish the job.

The game was exciting, regardless of the fact that the Giants were clearly and resolutely licked in a couple of rounds. For once the Yanks got some breaks and they acted like themselves. They simply ran amuck as they did on occasions in games during the season, and nothing could stop them. Yankee rooters, hosts of them, screamed with joy. It had been so long since they had seen their favorites maul the Giants.

Yankee rooters who had begun to think the Giants had their favorites on the run were back in faith with the Hugmen last night and were ready to step up and back the Yanks to win the series.

McGraw's Hurlers Used Up.

It didn't look like bad dope either, as the Yankee pitching staff is far from wearied, while the stalwarts of McGraw seem pretty well demolished, especially after the tough game of yesterday. McGraw will pretty nearly have to depend upon Bentley or Watson in the next game, as Nehf will need at least one more day of rest. On the other hand, Huggins has Hoyt and Bush rearing to go and Pennock all set to follow them, with Sam Jones on deck to put the finishing touch to the whole show if he is needed.

There wasn't any one hero in today's combat, though for seven rounds Shawkey was prominent. If he had continued through the eighth and ninth he would have been famous, but in the eighth a flukey hit put him in trouble when a ball batted straight at Everett Scott hopped over the shortstop's head for a single. A man was on first with none out, and a double play doubtless would have occurred. Instead two were on and none out, and old Bob was in a hole. The Giants started hitting him and he began to lose control, so with three runs in, three men on and two out, old Bob was yanked and Pennock summoned.

Pennock Halts Outburst.

Frank Frisch was the batter and worked Pennock for the call of 3 and 2. Then with all runners on the go the Yankee rooters were able to burst forth in cheers when Frankie's best was a popup to Scott.

In the ninth Ross Young caused a stir by poling one of Herb's curves to the distant fence in right center and legging it around the bases for a home run. He didn't even have to slide.

The capacity of the remodeled Polo grounds was tested for the first time in the fourth game of the series today. As it was Saturday, there was a mob of half holiday fans who had an opportunity to attend present. The mounted police had to ride a lot of them down in Eighth avenue. It was thought that about 45,000 persons with tickets were able to get into the grounds and undoubtedly 10,000 or more were left outside.

Pipp Plays; Ankle in Brace.

During the practice it was seen there were a lot of Yankee boosters present. A crowd always roots for the under dog. There was a great cheer from the crowd when Wallie Pipp appeared on the field at his regular position at first base. Everybody had read that he would be out the rest of the series because of injuring his already sprained ankle in the game Friday. Trainer Doc Wood sat up all night putting on hot and cold applications and then taped the injured member this morning with several yards of sail cloth or something, so that Wallie couldn't tell he was even lame.

It was ideal weather for a world's series. Overcoats were entirely unnecessary, though many had them along. The morning had been a bit cloudy and foggy, but the sun finally broke through before noon and everybody who wasn't busy started for the ball park.

YANKS VINDICATE HUGH'S DOPE BY BEATING GIANTS

an easy double play was in sight when the ball hit a pebble and as Scott was grabbing at the ball it took a high hurdle, jumped ten feet over Scott's head, going for a single. Casey Stengel, rising to the emergency, smashed a hit to right and drove home a run.

Ruth Heaves One.

Ruth made a wild, useless throw through the infield, the ball went to the dugout, and the other runners moved up. The quick change of luck seemed to upset Shawkey, who, after pitching his best in the pinches, suddenly wobbled after two were out, hit one batter, allowed a hit, passed Groh filling the bases with the Giant wrecking crew coming up raging and striving to perform a miracle by pulling such a hopeless game out of the fire.

Right there Shawkey got his long delayed walking papers. Pennock was summoned to prevent the miracle. He started with a strike, then, whipping his curve low, pitched three balls, and the situation commenced to look dangerous. Pennock steadied, got the next over, put everything he had on a fast ball, and Frisch swung under it and lofted a short fly to left, which really ended all chances, although to start the ninth Young walloped out a home run, his fourth hit of the game, and made the minority report more respectable.

Yanks Favorites Again.

As a game there was nothing to it excepting that rally and there was little to choose in the play. But the Yankees tonight again are favorites to win this series and the chances of stopping the Yankee attack with the Giant pitching crew in its present condition are not good.

McGraw, in all probability will start Bentley tomorrow and Hoyt is Huggins' chance if the day is dark. He had decided to use Hoyt today but the clouds rolled away at two o'clock and he switched to Shawkey and got away with it although Bob was tagged hard and steadily all the way and probably could not have won but for the frantic Yankee attack in the second inning which made his job an easy one.

Pipp was the surprise of the day. He patched up the ankle, tied the lame foot on and hobbled out on the line of duty. He could not make quick starts and one hit made during the Giant rally got past him because he could not move quickly enough.

The attendance was not up to yesterday's of course, and the crowds did not attempt to crowd in, but probably close to fifty thousand witnessed the struggle.

George Gipp Rated Greatest of Notre Dame Grid Stars

GEORGE GIPP.

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.

ARTICLE V.

During the many years Notre Dame, known as the Fighting Irish, has been represented on the gridiron, some wonderful players have been developed, warriors whose names are still fresh in the memories of those who have followed the football fortunes of the Hoosier institution for twenty years or more.

Going back twenty-three years, 1900 to be exact, Notre Dame had a great warrior in Louis J. "Red" Salmon. During his years of service he was rated the best fullback in the middle west and among the leaders of the country in his position. Although the man with the ball could be pushed or pulled in those days, Salmon made most of his ground unaided. He was fast and such a terrific plunger that other backs did not have the starting speed to buckle on to him and help until opposition was met. He was a terror on defense as well as offense, and many still consider him the greatest player who ever wore the colors of Notre Dame.

Rockne a Great End.

Since the days of Salmon there have been sterling warriors at Notre Dame. Knute Rockne, the present coach, who is one of the best strategists in the country, was quite a player. Rockne played end, and in his last year was among the leading flank players of the section. In his playing days, Rockne possessed the faculty of sizing up opponents' plays quickly, and he moved to the points of attack for the desired results.

The Bergman brothers have their admirers, and they were sterling players who played no small part in Notre Dame's football history. Then there was "Red" Miller, a sparkling half back, who practically unaided defeated Michigan at a time when Frank Longman, a former Wolverine full back, coached at Notre Dame. Pete Vaughan, the present coach at Wabash college, was another star player during his days at Notre Dame.

Gipp Greatest Star.

Gus Dorais was a great quarter back and open field runner, aside from being a punter and field goal kicker above the ordinary. Philbrook and Dimmick were a great pair of forwards, and Hamilton a back of no mean ability. Of later years there was Eichenlaub, an excellent plunging back and strong defensive player. Anderson and Kiley were a splendid pair of ends, and Paul Castner one of the best who ever wore a Notre Dame uniform.

Many others could be mentioned, but when ability of all is analyzed, the honor of being Notre Dame's greatest must go to George Gipp, who played his last game of football in 1920. Much was written and said about this wonderful player, and especially in the fall of his last year when he defeated the Army at West Point practically unaided. His wonderful passing and running in this game was a revelation to the east, and critics quickly recognized his ability and lauded his efforts.

Best Kicking Back.

Gipp, who weighed 175 pounds, was a clever runner, one of the most accurate passers since the coming of the forward pass back in 1906, and a punter and field goal kicker who ranked with the best of his day. In addition he was fast and possessed the happy faculty to do the right thing at the proper time. It was his uncanny knack of faking plays which made him so valuable on the offense.

After receiving the ball from the center Gipp used to grip it in his right hand. In this manner he would fake throws until the defense started to run back to cover eligible receivers. As soon as he saw an opening he tucked the oval under his arm to either skirt the end or drive off the tackle. This ability to mix his attack so cleverly made him a respected player in his last two years of football.

Star Open Field Runner.

Coach Rockne used him to run from punt formations behind sweeping interference. In carrying the ball on such plays he used excellent judgment in leaving his interferers to cut back through the line after the defense had been drawn over by an expected end run due to the wide sweep of the interference. His punts were generally high and well placed.

Defensively, he was a valuable player. He generally anticipated attacks and was in the vicinity of the ball at all times.

Following the West Point game of 1920, Gipp was taken ill with a throat affliction, and after a lingering illness passed away, mourned by the entire football world.

DE PAUW 60 YARD RUN, PASS BEATS LAKE FOREST, 13-0

Greencastle, Ind., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—De Pauw defeated Lake Forest, 13 to 0, by putting a touchdown over in each of the first and second periods today. The feature of the game was a sixty yard run for touchdown in the first minute by Krumheur. He ran through the visiting team from the first formation. A forward pass over the line, Krumheur to Irwin, in the second period netted the other marker. De Pauw had the ball on the 1 foot line as the half ended.

Lake Forest's line held the plunging De Pauw backs well, and the Illinoisans took the ball on downs several times, but they lacked the punch to advance any distance. Lineup:

ROCKNE'S AERIAL ATTACK SWEEPS OVER THE ARMY

offensive substitutions, and Notre Dame apparently was satisfied to hold its advantage and pounded whenever in danger. In the fourth quarter, however, the Army, with a do or die spirit, cut loose with everything they had been taught. Forward passes were hurled to all parts of the field, but the passes were expertly covered by the Notre Dame secondary defense.

The Hoosier forwards hurried the Army passers to such an extent there was not the necessary delay to permit the eligible players to get out in the clear. Toward the middle of the final period the Army cut loose with a long spiral, Jimmy Crowley, who had played bangup game all through the battle, intercepted one of these passes and ran thirty-five yards to the Army 35 yard mark. On the next play, Crowley circled the Army left end for eighteen yards, and then Den Miller started a dash off the Cadets' right tackle.

Miller's Great Run.

At least four Army tacklers had their hands on him, but he pivoted and differmed himself loose and then cut back through the remaining Army men and crossed the line for the visitors' second touchdown. Stuhldreher missed the goal from dropkick by a narrow margin. The game ended shortly afterwards, and Notre Dame was heralded as one of the greatest offensive machines ever to play in the east. It was especially lauded by Walter Camp and other well known authorities who occupied seats on the side lines.

In justice to the Army, it must be said they received a bad break early in the opening quarter, one which might have changed the entire complexion of the game had the play gone through. Baxter, the Army left end, all but caught a forward pass from Smythe, who had outrun Crowley to the ball. The Army end juggled the ball an instant and it finally fell to the ground. If Baxter had held the ball, it would have been the Army's oval on Notre Dame's 20 yard line, but the ball went back to the center of the field, and the Army was forced to punt.

Break Up Army Aerial Plays.

While the Army's forward passing looked bad, it was made so by the terrific charging of Notre Dame forwards, who tore through and either downed the passer or hurried him to such an extent he did not have a chance to toss accurately. Although outweighed, the Hoosier linemen more than held their own with the Army forward wall.

In his usual foxy way, Coach Rockne sprung a surprise by moving Joe Bach, a substitute guard, out to left tackle. Gus Stange, the regular tackle, was badly injured in the Lombard game a week ago and everybody close to the Notre Dame situation thought Johnny Noppenbarger would play the position. Bach, however, being a fast, heady player, was given the call and played a whale of a game, as did Adam Walsh at center and Gene Oberst at right tackle, while Capt. Harvey Brown was in the thickest of the fray at all times.

35,000 See Battle.

The game was played before a crowd estimated at 35,000. The entire cadet corps from West Point, consisting of 1,200, was on hand, and it would have done middle west gridiron fans a great good to have heard the organized rooting. The proverbial Army mule was also there, as were several notables of the United States army.

Although defeated, Coach John McEwen has a strong team, one which will undoubtedly profit by today's game. The players most certainly learned many fine points which should aid them immeasurably in their coming battles with Yale and the Navy.

The Notre Dame eleven left for home tonight. They are scheduled to arrive in South Bend at 5 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

TO HONOR VICTORS

Notre Dame, Ind., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—Plans are being completed by the students' activities committee for the reception of Coach Knute Rockne and his thirty-three gridders, when they return Sunday evening from their victory over the Army. The students intend to make the demonstration the greatest in the history of Notre Dame.

The word that Notre Dame had won by a 13-0 score was received by the students with one of the wildest celebrations ever witnessed on the campus. The returns play by play, were received in the Notre Dame gymnasium on the electric score board by a crowd estimated at 2,500.

It was the tenth meeting of these powerful elevens. As a result of today's victory Notre Dame has won seven games, the Army five, while last year's struggle resulted in a scoreless tie.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—Blott's place kick from the 17 yard line in the second quarter was all that saved Michigan from a scoreless tie with Vanderbilt this afternoon.

After the Wolverines had carried the ball on four successive plays from the middle of the field to the Vanderbilt 7 yard line, the Commodores held. Steger and Kipke were thrown for losses, and the Yost men were forced to attempt the place kick. Blott's effort was perfect. Final score of the game 3 to 0.

Few Subs Used.

Vanderbilt played a great defensive game, and kept Michigan from scoring twice in the first quarter. One of the Wolverines had the ball close to the Vanderbilt goal on the 10 yard line, and again on the 15 yard line, but the backs did not have the punch necessary to push the ball over.

Yost did not send in a substitute until the last five minutes of play, Vanderbilt did not use a substitute in the game, so hotly contested was the battle.

Passes Thrill.

Kipke and Steger were unable to get off any of their runs, and the only thrills of the game were in the forward passes. The Wolverines completed a total of sixteen for a total of ninety-seven yards. One pass, Steger to Uteritis, together with the run, netted Michigan forty yards.

Kipke had the best of Ryan in the punting duel, the Wolverine's punts averaging forty-five yards.

LONG RUNS PUT PENN ON TOP IN 13 TO 10 BATTLE

Philadelphia, Pa., Oct. 13. — [Special.]—Through the medium of two sensational forward passes, Penn defeated Swarthmore on Franklin field, 13 to 10, before a crowd of 35,000.

Capt. Tex Hamer and Grant West gate carried the ball over for the touchdowns that chased the gloom of the Red and Blue, following Evans' run the length of the gridiron for a game touchdown when he picked up McGraw's fumble back of the goal line.

BRADLEY, 26; ST. VIATOR, 0.

Bradley, Ill., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—Three long end runs to touchdowns by Correll and consistent line drives by Babcock and Carter gave Bradley a 26 to 0 victory over St. Viator this afternoon.

Touchdowns—Tryon [2], Sanford, Devoe, Marts, Workman. Points after touchdowns—Welch [2], Workman [2]. Goals from field—Workman, Welch.

Columbus, O., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—Ohio State's eleven was forced to bat to the limit to hold Colgate to a 23 to 23 tie in a spectacular game that kept 30,000 spectators holding their seats. The Buckeyes fought doggedly all the way, even after the first half, when the score stood 17 to 3 in the visitors' favor.

Ohio State drew the first blood when Workman kicked a 15 yard field goal. Soon after Tryon broke through Ohio's right side of the line and ran 60 yards for a touchdown, and Jim Welsh kicked a field goal.

In the second quarter Tryon again punctured Ohio's line and before pretty interference ran 26 yards for Colgate's second touchdown.

In the third quarter after Ohio held for three downs in the shadow of its goal on the fourth play Cornwell threw a short pass over the line to Sanford for Colgate's third touchdown. Welsh failed to kick goal this time.

Devoe scored Ohio's first touchdown in the third quarter after the Buckeyes had made three forward passes. The Buckeyes' second touchdown was scored by a 25 yard forward pass from Workman to Marts. Here Workman failed to kick goal.

With fifty more seconds to play, Workman, in a forward pass formation, could not locate his man, reverse his field, and ran 15 yards for Ohio's last touchdown. Breathlessly the fans waited for the point after touchdown and Workman did not fail this time.

Madison, Wis., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—Outplayed in the first quarter of their game with the Michigan Aggies, Wisconsin decidedly outpointed their opponents during the rest of the game and hung up a triumph of 13 to 0 today.

The work of Neller kept the Aggies in the race for the first half of the game. Snappy passes, Neller to Kipke, proved repeated ground gainers for the visitors.

In the second quarter Wisconsin quickly marched down the field to the five yard line and Harris went over. Capt. Below kicked goal.

Holmes, Wisconsin right half, carried the ball from the Aggies' 29 yard line to the 3 yard line around left end, and Harris went over for the second touchdown. Below kicked goal. Stangel took the ball over again for Wisconsin 10 minutes before the game ended, and the kick by Below was a success. The whistle blew with the ball in Wisconsin's possession a yard from the Aggies' goal posts.

Casey Stengel, who twice clouted his mates to victory in world's series by socking home runs, is shown crossing the plate in the seventh inning with the only run of the game. The veteran caught one of Sad Sam Jones' fast ones and drove it into the right field bleachers, just out of reach of Babe Ruth's outstretched hand.

HIGH SPOTS IN GIANTS' SECOND WIN OVER YANKS

HOST OF FANS LEARN DAY'S SCORES FROM TRIBUNE PHONE GIRLS

BY ANNA GARROW.
[Chief Tribune Operator.]

It will be many a day before a score of young women, TRIBUNE telephone operators, forget that the Yanks beat the Giants, Notre Dame triumphed over the Army, and Northwestern bowed to Indiana. They gave the scores of the different games over the wires so many thousand times yesterday that they know them by heart. Incidentally most of the operators discovered a lot about the educational system of America, learning the names of several hundred schools and colleges they never knew existed.

The calls yesterday started earlier than usual and judging from the number of persons who called up before noon to see if the Cubs and Sox were going to play, every one in the city intended going to the game. After dinner, however, it grew worse, thousands and thousands of calls coming in about the world series and the Notre Dame and Purple football games, together with hundreds of others seeking the scores on other grid games.

A check showed that at least one call came in for the score of each of the several hundred football games played throughout the country. But service is our middle name, so don't forget, State 6110 for all sporting scores.

MAROON SCRUBS PLAY FROSH; VARSITY RESTS

Slopping around on a muddy field while the regulars viewed Big Ten teams in action in other schools, University of Chicago varsity subs yesterday defeated the freshman team, 16 to 0, on the Midway practice field. The mud made all forms of football difficult, and this, combined with only mediocre playing by the varsity, prevented running up a big score.

Most of the battle was waged in freshman territory, the freshmah punts being invariably short. On the yearling outfit, Conley, field general, Neff, Rouse and Fulton showed to good advantage.

Coach Stagg with Lloyd Rohrke and the varsity backfield took in the Illinois-Butler game yesterday, other Maroon regulars being distributed to watch the performances of other conference teams. Lineup:

Iowa City, Ia., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—After fighting Iowa to a standstill in the first half, Purdue lost to the Hawkeyes, 7 to 0, here today in a game which was a series of thrills, rising to a climax when Fry hurled himself on the writhing mass of men one yard from Purdue's goal in the last quarter and cleft his way over the line. Fisher kicked goal.

The game was loosely played, but the teams were evenly matched. They fought from goal line to goal line, Purdue having the advantage in the first half, but falling utterly in the second session to best the Iowa line and depending entirely on aerial work.

Hawkeyes Get Busy.

The Hawkeyes did not really get under way until the third quarter, when they rushed the ball twice into the danger zone. Miller and Fry punctured the Purdue line freely in this period, and when the fourth quarter opened with the ball in their possession on their opponents' 25 yard line, brilliant plunges by Capt. Miller pushed the ball to the line, where Fry plunged over.

As the game closed Yerkes, 138 pound quarter, startled the stands by dodging through for 35 yards. Spreading of Purdue proved a brilliant runner, but the real surprise of the Boilermakers showed up in 30 and 35 yard passes that occasionally were completed.

Fry Saves Game.

Hetrick also shone for Purdue early in the game, nearly clearing the field in a scamper toward Iowa's goal, but Fry saved Iowa by a long tackle.

Penn State Wallops Gettysburg Team, 20-0

State College, Pa., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—Gettysburg college put up a gallant fight against Penn State today, but for the second consecutive year the Nittany Lions were victorious by a 20 to 0 score. Touchdowns—Crawford, Blessing, Grange [2]. Goals after touchdowns—Britton [2]. Grigas. Referee—J. C. Mosher [Northwestern]. Umpire—C. Dorrine [Maine]. Head linesman—J. S. Warts [Cornell]. Field judge—Meyer Morton [Michigan].

Urbana, Ill., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—Led by Harold [Red] Grange, sensational Illinois halfback, the Illini tore through Butler today for a 21 to 7 victory after being held to a 7 to 7 tie up to the opening of the fourth quarter. It was the last game to be played on historic Illinois field as the next home game will be the homecoming tilt Nov. 3 with Chicago which opens the new stadium.

Butler tied the score early in the third quarter when Middelsworth passed to Blessing, who ran 25 yards through the Illinois team for a touchdown. Illinois had held the lead from the opening minutes, when a blunder by the Butler quarter, Helton, in failing to kick on the fourth down gave Illinois the ball on Butler's 30 yard line. Crawford made the score practically unaided on a series of line plunges.

Rain Slows Play.

A driving rain which started in the second quarter, made the ball slippery and fumbles were frequent thereafter, though none of them led directly to scores. Northam, substitute fullback, carried the ball 55 yards to the Illinois 5 yard line in the second quarter, but the Illini line braced there and Butler lost the ball on downs.

Coach Bob Zuppke had Grange on the bench, resting him for the conference opener next week at Iowa, but he was sent in at the beginning of the second half. He carried the ball 40 yards to the Butler 20 yard line near the close of the third quarter but Illinois lost the advantage when a pass over the goal line was knocked down.

Grange Cuts Loose.

Grange cut loose in the final period. He ran the ball down from midfield to the 22 yard line with the aid of a 10 yard pass which he tossed to Britton and then legged around right end for a score. A few minutes later Illinois again got the ball in the center of the field and rushed it down to the 5 yard line on line plays through a faltering Butler defense, Grange and Heinie Schultz alternating in plunges through center and off tackle. Grange made the final score on a dodge through the right side of the line.

Touchdown—Marr.

BY WALLACE ABBEY.

Defeat came tumbling down on Senn high school eleven in the opening game of the city title race yesterday, when Marr, Lake View right end, connected with a pass not mean't for him at all, and skidded sixty yards through the mud for the touchdown which brought the Red and White out on top, 6 to 0, at De Paul field.

Senn's Defeat Big Upset.

Figured as one of the strongest contenders for the north section title, defeat came as a crushing setback to Coach Dick Crook's men and means a super spurt if the team climbs to the top. Senn has yet to win a game this year.

The aerial heave which resulted in disaster was launched by Lowmsberry, Senn full back, late in the final period. It was directed toward left end Adams, but sailed neatly into the arms of Marr, who lost no time in getting under way toward the goal. The pigskin was coated with mud, making it hard to handle during the entire game.

Lake View Line Strong.

Before the final quarter the contest was waged on about equal terms, both elevens opening up with assorted line bucks and passes. Lownsberry had the better of the kick duel with Bernstein and Senn threatened to score several times, but the Red and White line, the important cogs of which are Asp, Schell, Johonnott, and Wilcox, held with unexpected tightness.

BOWEN BATTLES LINDBLOM TEAM TO 7-7 DEADLOCK

ILLINOIS QUAIL SEASON OPENS NOV. 10.

WITH the Illinois quail season just about a month away, many shotgun fans are already beginning to plan for a day in the stubble with a good dog and a 20 gauge to scatter shot at the Bob Whites. Dog lovers claim that quail shooting is the sportiest game going, as it means rousing the fields behind some blue blooded dogs, who put on a show while working to locate the little feathered bombshells that fly like a blue streak.

The roar with which quail rise to wing indicates something of the speed at which they rush through the air. Hurtling at a considerable angle from the ground, on stiff, set wings, the birds sure can beat it, and to sling some No. 8 shot at a couple of Bob Whites as they slip it into high is certainly a sport fit for kings. The fact that a hunter keeps moving while quail hunting and gives him an opportunity to spend a day afield with a stanch friend, his dog, are incidents of a quail hunt that count much with sportsmen without doubt.

A few years ago we used to make opening day quite an event and our faithful setter played quite a part in this day. The evening before the big time we would hit for the country with a hunting pal and the dog. A friendly farmer (to whom overtures had been made) permitted us to sleep in his straw stack over night. Before sundown we stowed away our supper and made our "dens" in the stack and then curled up to try to sleep.

The dog would park itself between us and before morning we certainly did appreciate the warmth that it provided for us. Then at the break of day we crawled from our nest and with Sandy, our tan and white setter, dancing around, eager for the fun, we struck across the fields. Cold? Yes, as the ground was usually covered with frost, but boy, what fun! To watch our hard-working dog working back and forth, to see her "freeze" when she had found the covey, and then those moments before the bombshells jumped into the air—well, considering these thrills it's not surprising that the quail shooting fans are eager for the opening day.

But the real sport in quail shooting really comes after the coveys have been shot up a bit and become educated. Then is when Mr. Bob White shows his tricks and causes the dog and hunter all kinds of trouble. Did you ever see a setter bushwack a slope, weaving back and forth trying to find some members of a scattered flock and puzzled, finally look around as if to say, "I'm doin' my best, old pal, but these birds are certainly actin' funny." At times like that a smart dog seems to all but talk in its eagerness to please its master. But it's this trickiness of Bob White, his matching the sportsman's tricks with better ones that make the game so much fun.

Although there are quite a number of "different" quail found in the eastern and southern parts of United States they are merely climatic variations of the one and only Bob White. In the south they have what is called the Florida quail, a handsome bird with darker and richer coloring than the northern Bob White, but it is not an absolutely different species.

LOCAL BILLIARD LEAGUE BEGINS PLAY TOMORROW

BY JOE DAVIS.

With the strongest field in its history the Chicago Billiard league will open its eighth annual tournament tomorrow night, three games being scheduled. Among the newcomers this season who will entertain the fans are Frank Lopez, who last year represented Cleveland in the Interstate league, and Earl Lookabaugh, former national amateur three cushion champion, who last year represented Pittsburgh.

Kleckhefer at Scratch.

Augie Kleckhefer, who this year is a contestant in the National Championship Three Cushion league, has been placed at scratch in company with Pierre Maupome of the Bankers' room, each playing 60 points. Lookabaugh has been placed at 55 together with Lopez, while Towle, Kenney, and Le Gros are on the 50 mark.

For the last few years the race has been close until the finish, and the players with lower handicaps have just as much chance as the stars.

The prize list this year will approximate $3,500, and, as in previous years, the main prize will be the silver trophy donated by William J. Blake.

Tomorrow's Games.

The games carded for tomorrow are: Towle [50] and Maupome [60], at Bensinger's, 73 West Monroe street; Hennessy [45] and Lopez [55], at Madison and Dearborn Arcade; Le Gros [50] and Lookabaugh [55], at the Rainbow, 731 W. 63d street.

Welker Cochran, who is now located in his own room at Hollywood, Cal., will be in Chicago today en route for New York where he will compete in the world's balkline championship which will start Oct. 29. Cochran will practice at Mussey's Madison street room.

Augie Kleckhefer will make his first road trip in the National three cushion billiard league this week, starting tomorrow night against Cannefax at Detroit. He will then play at Toledo, Cleveland, and Pittsburgh.

Kinrey Matsuyama, the little Japanese player who appeared here several times last winter, is now associated with the Nassau academy at Philadelphia, and gives promise of developing into a star.

Great Field of Stars.

The list of leading players is practically the same that competed in the western open championship at Memphis last week, and it is expected that the battle for the first prize of $500 will produce another brilliant struggle with Walter Hagen, Ed Loos, Jock Hutchison, Laurie Ayton, Bob Cruickshank, Bob MacDonald, and Joe Kirkwood, among the leaders, although there are a score or more players who may climb among the high winners.

The Illinois players will compete for the Willie Marshall trophy, given in memory of the late professional of the Onwentsia club, one of the most popular players in the country.

The last of the local professionals left last night and in all there will be about thirty contestants from the Chicago district.

Pitcher Wins at Midlothian.

Lewis W. Pitcher, veteran southpaw, won the championship of the A division in the annual tournament of the Royal and Ancient Golfers at Midlothian Country club. This division is limited to players of 70 years of age and over the rain soaked course Mr. Pitcher led with a card of 53—53—106. In the senior class, for players of from 65 to 69, Richard Fitzgerald, with an even century took the low gross honors, while Frank A. Helmer, another southpaw, won the low net prize with 106—17—89.

E. F. Bryant, with 94, and L. [illegible] Dewey, with 97—21—76, were the respective low gross and net winners among the "juniors," who had a rating of 80 to 64 years. Among the sophomores, who ranged from 55 to 63, "Josh" Stevenson won the low gross prize with 92, while Charles H. Thorne took low net with 98—20—78.

The sharpshooter in the "freshman" class, 50 to 54, was C. W. Booth, who Pitcher Wins at Midlothian.

Lewis W. Pitcher, veteran southpaw, won the championship of the A division in the annual tournament of the Royal and Ancient Golfers at Midlothian Country club. This division is limited to players of 70 years of age, and over the rain soaked course Mr. Pitcher led with a card of 53—53—105. In the senior class, for players of from 65 to 69, Richard Fitzgerald, with an even century took the low gross honors, while Frank A. Helmer, another southpaw, won the low net prize with 106—17—89.0

E. F. Bryant, with 94, and L. R. Dewey, with 97—21—76, were the respective low gross and net winners among the "juniors," who had a rating of 60 to 64 years. Among the sophomores, who ranged from 55 to 59, "Josh" Stevenson won the low gross prize with 92, while Charles H. Thorne took low net with 98—20—78.

The sharpshooter in the "freshman" class, 50 to 54, was C. W. Booth, who finished with a low gross of 86. Dr. C. L. Nichols won the low net trophy with 106—26—86.

OAK PARK.

R. D. Stevenson won the club title, defeating W. F. Chiniquy, 2 and 1, in the thirty-six hole final. C. L. Pennision, who won the title last year, met defeat in the third round from R. F. Waud, who was later downed by Stevenson in the semi-finals. The rain yesterday cut the field in the class event, which brought a novel situation in class C. J. B. Noel was the only contender in that division, so he won both gross and net prizes, with 98—20—78. In class A, E. L. Hartig won low gross with 87, and D. C. Edwards low net with 87—7—80. Both also were winners in the sweepstakes. F. C. Lowrey, 102, and Frank Zimmerman, 113—20—02, were the respective winners in class B.

MIDLOTHIAN.

Informal sweepstakes will now be in order at Midlothian as long as golf can be played. Jack Patterson, the club professional, will stay on the job until the first of November. In the meantime, Patterson will devote part of his time to superintending the work of building the new winter links at Chicago Beach hotel.

ILLINOIS.

Arthur C. Hammond, former president of the Westmoreland club, was elected president of the Illinois Golf club at a meeting last week. W. J. O'Brien, president of the Sterling-Midland Coal company, was elected vice president, and H. W. Redman, vice president of the Oaks Coal company, secretary. Walter W. Ahlschlager is the treasurer, and the directors are Walter L. Beckley, Harry Meder and William B. Riney. The course has made fine progress and the officers are planning to have the clubhouse ready for opening in the spring.

SKOKIE.

William E. Burch was elected president of the Skokie Country club last night, succeeding George J. Pope, under whose administration the club had a highly successful year. Mr. Burch, who was vice president last year, is a veteran member of the club. Clarke M. Cavenee was elected vice president, Thomas E. Drever was reelected treasurer, and Harry R. Kimbark, secretary. The new directors are David Beaton Jr. and Maurice Miller.

WESTMORELAND.

The team event, which was scheduled yesterday as the second day's play in the Columbus day tournament, was postponed on account of the rain. A few players competed in the Fellowship cup contest, E. J. Nichols winning with 84—7—79.

RIDGEMOOR.

John H. Victor, holder of the club title, yesterday made a new record of 34 on the last nine holes, having five birdies. He was out in 39, three above par, but came home three under and equaled perfect figures of 73 for the eighteen holes. Victor accomplished his feat largely because of the fine condition of the greens. Victor's card, with par comparisons, follows:

Out	355	455	435—39
Par	455	554	535—39
In	323	545	534—34—73

WILL MAKE DIRT FLY

JULES ELLINBOE.

PERCY FORD.

Dirt track auto racing stars are rallying to the call of the Chicago Motor Speedway association from every section of the United States for the title events to be held next Sunday at Hawthorne. It will be the most interesting get-together meet of exclusive dirt track racers in many years—a world's series in one day.

Interest in the race centers around the effort of stars from other parts of the country to dislodge Woodbury and Wenneston, Chicago racers, from their leadership. These drivers are termed the "midwest champions," having won their titles recently at Hawthorne. As all the dirt track drivers of prominence in the United States and Canada have been invited to enter this meet, the winners will be given cups and medals emblematic of the national championship.

Ford Enters Fray.

The latest star of the dirt track to jump into the fray was Percy Ford, veteran Chicago racer and former national amateur champion. Ford has a large following in Chicago who will pull for him to win. He proved at Indianapolis in 1921 that he can set a pace with the best in the game, whether on the board or dirt oval.

Jules Ellingboe, considered by some critics the most resourceful dirt track driver in the world, also is entered for this race against Woodbury, Wenneston, Ford, Nowicki, Parkhurst, and a long string of lesser lights.

To Eliminate Dust.

Time trials and eliminations will be out of the way in time to wet down the Hawthorne track more than twenty-four hours before the races, Manager Kandul says. This will eliminate the dust element.

The track will be rolled, swept, and covered with tons of calcium chloride. This will lay the dust and make the track lightning fast for the drivers and more comfortable for racers and spectators.

SANDE'S RECORD IS MUCH BETTER THAN DONOGHUE'S

THE JOCKEYS' RECORDS

	Mounts.	1st.	2d.	3d.	Unpl.	Pct.
Donoghue	391	69	59	73	190	32.57
Sande	343	90	67	60	115	39.00

BY FRENCH LANE.

Steve Donoghue, the famous English jockey who comes to America this week to ride Papyrus in the international race at Belmont park Saturday, hardly matches up with the Yankee youngster, Earl Sande, who will have a leg up on Zev, according to the records made by both boys this season.

The figures show that Sande has piloted thirty more winners under the wire than Donoghue despite the fact that he has taken 153 less mounts. Sande's winning per cent doubles that of his celebrated European rival.

Yanks Outrank Steve.

There are a dozen or more American riders who have made better records this season than Donoghue. This in the face of the figures, which show that Steve has been the leading English rider for the last eight seasons and up to the present time is the leader this year. The amount of money earned by Sande for the rich Rancocas stables and for the three or four other owners for whom he has ridden is many times greater than that earned by Donoghue. But the English purses hardly stack up with the rich offerings on several of the leading American tracks.

But both are past masters of the riding game, one a veteran and the other a youngster, and their duel will add all the more interest to the great international classic.

The English and American style of riding has differed somewhat for many years—in fact, differs now—but Donoghue runs more to the American method of riding than any of the other foreign jockeys, it is claimed. Most English jockeys still cling to the long stirrup and ride with straight polse. Donoghue has shattered this ancient custom by shortening up his stirrups and assuming the crouching position known so long among the best American jockey.

Sande's Earnings $100,000.

Sande's complete earnings for this season alone are said to total more than $100,000. Should he bring home the big end of the $100,000 international purse Harry Sinclair, master of the Rancocas holdings, is very likely to reward him with a good big slice of the rich melon.

INDIAN HILL.

M. E. Schoenthaler won the C. G. Barr cup trophy at Indian Hill yesterday with a card of 83—8—75. Other leaders were A. D. Edwards, 81—5—76, E. F. Cummins, 89—12—77; W. D. Harvey, 85—9—77, and C. L. Stacy, 84—6—78.

OLYMPIA FIELDS.

Olympia Fields will hold its annual trophy dinner on Oct. 20 at 6:30 p. m.

EDGEWOOD.

In the annual president vs. vice president team match, the team led by Vice President George D. Beckley defeated President Charles M. Dolan's team, 34 to 28. Low net and low gross for the day went to Thomas Frady with 76—1—69, while Walter T. Atwood, Harold S. Jackson, Lawrence S. White, and Albert W. Anderson composed the low net foursome.

THE INQUIRING REPORTER

Every Day He Asks Five Persons, Picked at Random, a Question.

The Tribune will pay $5 for each question accepted for the Inquiring Reporter to ask. Send name and address with your question to "The Inquiring Reporter," Chicago Tribune.

The Question.

Which horse do you think will win the international race, Zev or Papyrus?

Where Asked.

Randolph street, at Michigan avenue.

The Answers.

George J. Roder, 90 East Randolph street salesman—Zev.

I'm a booster for home talent, in sports, business, and everything else. America first. Zev is the better horse, anyhow. Zev has won practically every big race in his division this year, and there has been nothing off color in any of his victories.

Bruce E. Ender, 90 East Randolph street, salesman—Zev should win. There was a long trip on the water for Papyrus and he will be in a strange land. Another thing, Zev was trained by Sam Hildreth, one of the greatest trainers in the world.

John Ramberg, 808 George street, private chauffeur—I'd put my money on Zev. That's the only answer I could give, because I'm all American. I'm sticking for American sports. There's another reason—there's too much difference in the climate, or altitude. I noticed it when in London and along the coast of Kent.

Laren Balley, 5429 Cottage Grove avenue, mechanic—The American horse, you bet. I haven't been paying very much attention to this race yet—it's too early—but I know this horse of ours is pretty good when it comes to winning, and I never heard much about the English horse.

Roman Cegielski, 1162 Perry avenue, mail carrier—Zev. Zev is the stronger horse of the two, he has won more races than Papyrus has, and is a better trained horse. Did you ever see Zev? He's a beauty! As I heard a man say the other day, he's the cream of American thoroughbreds.

PAIR NEFATTI WITH CHARDON IN BIKE RACES

All Nefatti, Senegalese athlete, will be paired with Henri Chardon of France instead of Lucien Louet, when the six day bike race starts at the Coliseum on Oct. 27. This was announced last night by Manager Paddy Harmon, upon receipt of a cablegram from Nefatti. The latter and Chardon sailed yesterday on the steamer Paris from Havre.

Nefatti said he believed he would have a better chance of winning with Chardon, and wanted to make a good impression on his first spearance in the United States. He is said to be the greatest Negro rider since the days of Major Taylor.

Louet will be paired with John Patrick of Newark, N. J., according to the promoters, an unusually strong young rider.

PANTHERS TO PLAY AMOS.

Roseland Panthers will play Amos A. A. at Whitman park, 115th and Halsted, at 3 o'clock today.

HUESTON, KEOGH BREAK EVEN IN POCKET GAMES

Tom Hueston and Jerome Keogh of Rochester, N. Y., broke even in their two games in the national pocket series at Mussey's Madison street room yesterday, the local player taking the afternoon session, 100 to 98 in twenty-five innings, and the visitor winning the night game, 100 to 78 in seventeen innings.

Hueston won the matinée event after apparently being beaten. Keogh, coming from behind, made a run of 27 and needed only two points. Hueston played safe and after Keogh missed Tom went out with a great run of 28.

Hueston's high runs were 28, 26, and 12, Keogh getting 27 and 17.

In the night session Keogh, after a slow start, ran 27 in his eighth innings and following with 17 two innings later, took a big lead. Hueston closed the gap with runs of 13, 11, and 29 near the finish, but Keogh made 26 in his fourteenth inning and after two misses duplicated this run and won.

BURMAN LEAVES TODAY FOR N. Y. TO BATTLE LYNCH

Joe Burman, popular local bantamweight, departs for New York today determined to make good in his quest to wrest the bantamweight championship from Joe Lynch, when they clash in a fifteen round decision bout at Madison Square garden Friday night.

Burman was full of confidence when he finished work at the Arcade gymnasium yesterday. After arriving in New York tomorrow noon he will have three more days in which to taper off his training. Although the local man has been a persistent challenger for the 118 pound title for years this will be his first chance at it in a decision bout. Joe has met Lynch on four other occasions, but all were no decision affairs. The dope shows that Burman won two popular verdicts among the newspapermen present. While Lynch, according to word from the east, is the betting favorite, Burman will not lack the support of backers.

Bud Taylor and Sammy Mandell, accompanied by Manager Eddie Long, are to leave on the same train with the Burman party. Taylor being booked to appear in the semi-final of twelve rounds with Phil Rosenberg of New York on the championship card.

Work will be completed the latter part of this week on the indoor arena at Blue Island, Ill., where Jim Mullen intends to stage weekly boxing shows.

Larney Lichtenstein, manager of Ernie Joozeman, who boxes Frankie Schaefer in one of the star ten round bouts at East Chicago tomorrow night, wants to match Joozeman with Sammy Mandell.

The boxers who are to perform at the Indiana club will weigh in at 3 p. m. before the East Chicago boxing commission. Schaefer will find Joozeman a tough opponent, as the South Chicago lad stands with his right foot and hand extended. They are booked to travel ten rounds at 120 pounds. Two other bouts are also on the card.

Mrs. Hurd Wins Berthellyn Cup; Beats Miss Fordyce

Philadelphia, Pa., Oct. 13.—Mrs. Dorothy Campbell Hurd of Philadelphia, former women's national champion, today defeated Miss Louise Fordyce of Youngstown, O., 2 and 1, in the final round of the women's invitation golf tournament at the Huntington Valley Country club for the Berthellyn cup.

GAMES TODAY WRITE FINIS TO CITY TITLE SEMI-PRO SEASON

With the Normals playing the Pyotts a double header and the American Giants tackling Logan Square at the northwest side park, semi-pro teams in the city championship race for the Charles H. Luck trophy will call it quits for the season after this afternoon. The first game at Pyott park will be called at 1 o'clock.

Followers of Billy Niesen's aggregation have planned to honor Dolly Gray for the great work the young southpaw has done for the west siders. In twenty contests hurled for Niesen Gray has turned in seventeen triumphs. Jack Quinn of the Boston Red Sox will pitch one of the games for the Normals. It is probable that he will face Niesen's ace.

Cermaks and St. Michaels, who battled their way through the preliminary games and earned the right to play a three game series for the Dever cup, hook up today in the first of the set at Cermak park. A great battle of southpaws is promised followers of this series, Sullivan of the Saints and Buckeye of the Cermaks being scheduled to work.

SANDLOTTERS IN CHAMPIONSHIP BATTLES TODAY

Two baseball championships are at stake today in Chicago's amateur series, contenders in all four leagues hooking up in two double headers.

At Atkins and Freund park, 54th street and Oakley avenue, the Fergus Boosters, only undefeated team in the Liberty league, will meet the Chicago Feds in the first of a three game series at 1 o'clock, followed by a Boys' league game at 3 o'clock between the Cascade Laundries and the Ace A. C.

At Murley park, Kedzie and Elston, the championships of the juvenile junior leagues are up for decision, when the Rose Hills and the Nade Boys battle for the title in the Juvenile league in a 1 o'clock game, while the windup will bring together the undefeated Vendleys and the Enterprise A. V-63

The New Enclosed Car Group

The highest expression of custom body building has been achieved by Cadillac designers in the new V-63 enclosed car group. They possess a dignity and grace that quickly wins the eye—a fine reserve and a luxurious symmetry of outline.

An interesting accomplishment in these new bodies is an increased range of vision for the driver, made possible by reducing the size of the front pillars, a betterment toward which body designers have been striving for many years.

Genuine butt-walnut panels, in matched sets, are used on the inside of all doors, and the upholstery, carpets, curtains and fittings have been chosen with the elaborate care which an interior decorator would use in arranging the finest drawing room.

But these refinements and achievements in body design alone could not move those who have purchased V-63 to the expressions of enthusiasm heard wherever motor cars are discussed. The new, inherently balanced engine performs with such smoothness that at any speed the throbbing, thrumming, drumming sound usually associated with closed bodies is totally absent.

It is this performance which places the Cadillac enclosed car group in a position wholly apart.

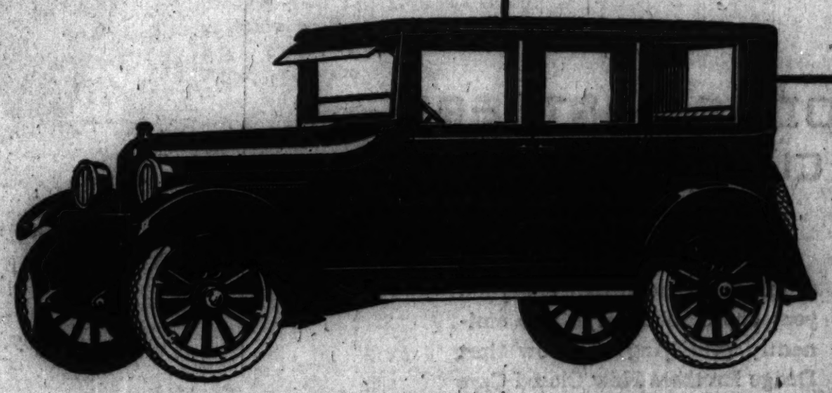
The Performance Is Assured— the Beauty and Comfort Are Evident



Your first thought of any Hupmobile is of its brilliant, reliable performance, its sturdy long life and its high investment value.

Your first thought when you see this new Hupmobile Sedan, however, must inevitably be that it is one of the most graceful and distinguished closed cars you have ever seen.

In its long, sweeping lines, broad curves and the rich harmony of interior gray upholstery and new Hupmobile blue exterior finish, this Sedan is a striking triumph of the body designer's art.

The fact that it is designed and built in Hupmobile's own shops assures you that the solid worth and durability for which the Hupmobile is celebrated is as pronounced in the body as in the chassis.

Best of all, perhaps, is the fact that you can drive this Hupmobile Sedan for great distances without undue fatigue. It rides with remarkable buoyancy, while its increased engine power, unprecedented smoothness, and far greater sprightliness make driving it a joy.

The favor with which this new Sedan is meeting everywhere is creating a heavy demand. We advise promptness on your part in ordering a demonstration so that you may, without unnecessary delay, judge the car for yourself.

The New Hupmobile

ART OF BOXING "INVENTED" BY JAMES J. CORBETT

BY FRANK SMITH.

There are hosts of boxing fans alive today who remember the upset to pugilistic dope as a result of the John L. Sullivan-James J. Corbett fight at New Orleans, La., on Sept. 7, 1892. Perhaps there is no one who remembers it more minutely than Corbett, who remains among us, healthy, wealthy, and wise.

There were few people who followed the ring game at that time who gave Corbett a chance. Jim was about the only one extant at that time who figured he would be the heavyweight champion. He was not a bit backward telling just how he would win, but the bugs gave him the horse laugh.

Jim at that time was a sleek, good looking, harmless appearing bank clerk from California. He had been boxing at the Olympic club in San Francisco and was king bee among the amateurs. He had been using gloves. These were foreign to the makeup of Sullivan, who always had fought with bare fists.

Science Counted Little.

Previous to this bout, the champions in the various classes were of the caliber that went in to do or die, and paid little attention to the science of boxing. Corbett's victory over Sullivan revolutionized the sport.

Odds as high as 16 to 1 were offered that Sullivan would win. Backers of the champion refused to concede Corbett a ghost of a show. Sullivan himself shared the popular belief in his invulnerability. He entered the ring fully expecting to lay "the dude" low in a few rounds and did almost no training for the contest.

For twenty rounds Sullivan begged Corbett to "stand up and fight," but the youth had laid out his program and followed it to the letter. He played to Sullivan's weakness, backing away from his foe's heavy advances and pecking away with a left jab that tortured Sullivan.

The Winning Round.

Herewith is a description of the twenty-first round, that brought the world a new champion:

Some instructions from Billy Delaney (Corbett's manager) when resting were responsible for Jim's coming to scratch meaning business. He began work rapidly and sent over a rain of rights and lefts. Sullivan clinched and tried to save himself, but Corbett would break away and begin a new onslaught, against which the champ made feeble defense. Finally Jim threw the big fellow off and banged him in the jaw with his right, and down Sullivan went. He managed to get to his feet, and at him again went Corbett. A well directed left to Sullivan's battered and bleeding nose, followed with a right to the jaw, and down the big fellow went again. He struggled up, but went down immediately under a rain of blows. He was unable to rise. Human nature had been taxed to the limit, and the world's champion of an hour or so before had lost his title.

For months after Sullivan lost the title his stanchest admirers refused to credit the defeat until they heard it from their idol's own lips.

Enduring beauty for your roof —hidden for ages in the hills

FOR your roof—a newly discovered color in slate, of unique and permanent beauty!

Century after century, it lay hidden away in the Georgia hills—until a quarry blast revealed it. Now, crushed into tiny flakes, it is enameled upon a wholly new type of slate-surfaced shingle.

This unique color, weathered brown, suggests the subdued beauty of harvested fields. It mellows with age, too, like the thatch of an English cottage.

No artificially colored shingles can rival this rare tone. For nature has created it as she does her jewels—by pressing it for ages under mountains of earth and rock. And only in the Richardson quarries is it found.

Architects are enthusiastic at the new color effects made possible by the weathered brown, especially when blended with other Richardson shingles of jade green, tile red, or black pearl.

A super-shingle

This new weathered brown is used only on the Richardson Super-Giant Shingle—a unique roofing product which you should know all about, no matter what color you select.

For this shingle offers a new degree of serviceability in a roof, just as the weathered brown offers new beauty.

First, because it is 37% larger than the ordinary shingle, fewer are needed to cover a given roofing area. Thus the cost of laying is 35% less.

Second, it is 50% thicker than the ordinary shingle and therefore lasts much longer. Incidentally this greater thickness casts a deeper shadow line that gives life and interest to the roof.

Third, because it is 100% stiffer than the ordinary shingle, it remains rigid under all kinds of weather and makes the whole roof twice as firm.

Its inner secrets

But, of course, the true measure of roofing service goes beyond the color or size of the shingle to the materials in it. As you know, slate-surfaced shingles are built on a base or core of felt impregnated with asphalt and surfaced under pressure with slate granules.

Exceptional quality in these three materials makes the Richardson Super-Giant the finest slate-surfaced shingle produced.

Take, for instance, the felt upon which depends the very life of your roof. Richardson felt, so architects, or roofing dealers will tell you, has for fifty years been recognized and used as the best. The asphalt is refined exclusively by the Richardson process from the highest grade raw materials. And the flakes of slate surfacing, found only in the Richardson quarries, seal the shingle permanently against weather and fire hazards.

The Super-Giant Shingle—50% thicker, 100% more rigid, and 35% more economical in cost of laying

Prove the facts yourself

A super-shingle indeed, when you weigh its points one by one! First—absolutely exclusive color effects. Second—unusual dimensions which give you added roofing protection at 35 less in cost of laying. And finally—exceptionally high-test standards in its three materials: felt, asphalt, and slate surfacing.

Go to the nearest dealer in lumber, hardware or building material whose name is listed below, or to your contractor, and ask to see the Richardson Super-Giant Shingle in weathered brown. Feel it, weigh it, measure it, note the rare color. Then compare it with ordinary shingles—the difference will convince you.

Meanwhile, send for our beautiful new booklet, Roofs of Distinction, showing the exclusive color combinations of Richardson slate surfacing, and containing valuable roofing facts. Or, ask for our booklet, Roofing on the Farm. Just use the coupon below.

Motor City Sets New Record with Annual Exhibit

Motor Fans Demand Expert Opinion on 1924 Improvements.

BY WHITCOMB WILLIAMS.

DETROIT, Mich., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—Under the auspices of the Detroit Automobile Dealers' association, the annual closed car show which closed this evening, was by far the most successful event of its kind ever staged in this, the Automobile city. It also marked the opening of the new convention hall at Woodward and Forrest avenues, which gave the exhibitors an ideal location, with 90,000 square feet of floor space.

Progress which the automobile industry has made within the last twenty years in the closed line was strikingly revealed in the display of approximately 250 cars, which included the inclosed models of practically every motor car builder in the great field, from the highest priced and luxurantly furnished limousine to the lowest priced coupe. Here, too, were found the reasons why nearly 50 per cent of the passenger vehicles built today are inclosed types, as compared with a few, which, a few years ago were made only on order for men of wealth.

From the hour of opening the doors of the show on Saturday evening, Oct. 6, until closing hour tonight the who came to see and to buy. The broad aisles were filled with those immense arena gave ample room for the display of cars, and also for the vast throngs that attended the show.

As usual with all American automobile shows, Detroit made cars were in the majority. But the "foreign made" cars—those made in other cities—were well represented, and not a booth in the great hall that was not well patronized. Among the latter cars were the Rolls-Royce, Jordan, Stearns, Stutz, Locomobile, Peerless, Pierce-Arrow, Chandler, Nash, Haynes, Marmon, and Willys-Knight. The prospective buyer had a vast field from which to choose, and it was noticed that those who came to place their order took plenty of time in making their choice. New models, scores of them, with the added features, such as the four wheel brake types, were questions which could not be decided without much thought on the part of the prospective buyer and considerable explanation and demonstration by the Detroit dealers.

The importance and popularity of the closed car has increased at a speed that has taxed to the utmost the facilities of the manufacturers to keep pace with demand—in fact, they have been unable to do so during the last three years, the period when the closed car has seen its greatest increase. When Detroit's first closed car exhibition was held, five years ago, it was an exclusive event, attended only by the recognized men of wealth, but the picture has changed, and this year's show was equal in every way to the midwinter shows held in New York and Chicago in its attraction for the general public.

WEIGHED WITHOUT A WAIT

A new type of scale, automatic and accurate, has been installed on the main highway between Washington and Baltimore to determine the exact amount and kind of traffic using the road. The scales, installed by the University of Maryland, co-operating with the United States bureau of public roads, counts and weighs moving vehicles, no matter at what speed they pass over it. The weight of both front and rear axles of passing vehicles are registered.

The Design's the Thing, Says Closed Car Expert

"Modern ideas in body design have entirely changed our old notions that a seven passenger sedan always meant a heavy, lumbering, costly conveyance," said C. A. Englebeck, general manager of the Peerless Motor Car Company of Illinois, yesterday.

"Many of us were really ready to sacrifice the roomy convenience to get away from other disadvantages that the old style 'big cars' were afflicted with. We bought four and five passenger cars and skimped on needed room for the sake of lighter weight and better appearance.

"With this year's development in body design, it is possible to secure all of the comfort in the fine car world without sacrificing mechanical performance."

Farm Needs Given Attention in New Closed Car Model

At last the farmer has been given a closed car that he can utilize for various farm jobs and "chores" with the same cheerful abandon as he does his open touring car.

This has been the farmer's winning argument for the touring car over the closed car for some years and it is admittedly a reasonable one. Practical service on the farm means the hauling of grain and other material of a highly "spillable" nature.

Summing up "practical service" for the farmer means the haulage of milk cans, live poultry, root crops, cans of kerosene, machinery oil, household supplies, garden tools, implement parts, rolls of belting and a long list of every conceivable sort of usable material on the farm from wire fencing to an occasional live calf.

It is partly to meet his need, according to A. C. Barber, Willys-Overland distributor, that the new Overland closed car, "Champion," has appeared.

This new versatile model is unique. With an all steel body built on a standard chassis, it is cradled on triplex springs and powered with the larger Overland engine.

In the Champion, the rear seat and upholstery is entirely removable, providing fifty cubic feet of clear carrying space. Apart from this, both front and rear seats quickly adjust forward and backward. The front seat adjusts to three positions so that a tall driver can move it back to drive without leg cramp and a short driver can move it forward so as to reach the pedals without stretching. The rear seat can be adjusted backward so that rear seat passengers will not be crowded when the front seat is moved back.

Removal of the upholstery leaves an absolutely clear carrying space capable of real service to the farmer who can load his tools, bags of fodder, produce and so forth into the car through the wide rear door with the satisfaction of knowing that the car can be thoroughly cleared out later and the rear seat installed for passenger trips.

HOW DO FAIR BUYERS JUDGE A CAR? HERE'S ONE MAN'S OPINION

WHEN a woman is buying a closed car, what does the salesman do first, raise the hood and explain the engine, or open the door of the body and call attention to the nicety and refinement of the interior furnishings? More and more buyers are taking for granted the structural strength and chassis efficiency and every day sees an increase in importance of the body arrangement and appointments, in the opinion of H. H. Buggie, general manager of the Dura company.

"That is why almost invariably the first thing a salesman does is to open the door of the body," he said yesterday.

"It is interesting to note that a seemingly very little item made the closed car possible. It is the window regulator. Raising and lowering the windows, adjusting the ventilation, warmth in winter or coolness in summer, is all possible because of the now perfected window regulator. In addition, greater importance is being placed upon the other essentials to closed car completeness, such as dome lights, side lights, pull to handles, etc.

"Beauty has cast its spell since the day the world began and will until doomsday. It is the nature of man first to concern himself with fundamentals—then add to the fundamentals the witchery of beauty.

"The automobile began as a vehicle and has become an equipage. First mechanical excellence, then beauty and luxury."

Scout Car Finds Good Going Over Florida Highways

FLORIDA roads, generally speaking, are in good condition, with many miles of pavement in place, according to reports made to the highway department of the Chicago Motor club by John H. Gramah, the club's chief road surveyor, who is now in the south.

Last week's report showed road conditions between Nashville and Jacksonville. From Jacksonville to Daytona, a distance of 115 miles, the road through Hastings is of brick, 8 feet wide, but with generous shoulders. There are some spots that are a little rough but not so as to make traveling uncomfortable. A new road to the east of the present highway is being planned as a short cut to coast points.

Daytona to Tampa, 164 miles—The first 27 miles finds pavement, then a fair gravel road for 12 miles. Entering Sandford and through Orland, Kissimmee and Haines City to Tampa, the road is all paved.

Tampa to St. Petersburg, 52 miles—The route is through Oldsmar, Dunedin and Pinellas. The road to Oldsmar, 15 miles, is of 18 foot brick and the remaining 36 miles is mostly 8 foot brick.

Tampa to Leesburg, 107 miles—Brick pavement to Auburndale and sand-clay surface from Auburndale to Leesburg, 57 miles.

Lake City to Jacksonville, 55 miles—new 16 foot concrete road just finished.

The car is now enroute from Lake City through Valdosta, Tifton, Cordele and Perry to connect with the regular route at Macon, this being a short cut from Macon to the Florida west coast.

ALWAYS STRAIN IT.

To accept unknown brands of gasoline from wayside garages and to put it in the car without straining through chamois may give the engine a stomach ache and cause needless trouble and expense.

Never a Body Built Like This Before—Baked Enamel Finish on Wood Frame

JUST what thousands of motorists have been waiting for—a Jewett Six enclosed car, or brougham, at $1325! It's the cleverest 5-passenger closed car ever devised. Its new type of body construction isn't available IN ANY OTHER CAR! And remember—it's a Jewett Six!

Never before has an enclosed car body been built like this new Jewett Brougham! The all steel body panels are fastened to stout wood body frame. Wood, because wood absorbs vibration, reduces noise and "drumming" to nil. Each steel panel is dipped and baked three separate times, with a rub between each coat, then fastened to the wood frame. The baking is done separately because the intense heat required to bake enamel would warp a wood frame. Lift the rear cushion. You'll see the shiny enamel INSIDE, as well as out. No chance of rusting, corrosion or deteriorating.

What's the result of this baked enamel finish? Just this. A high, glossy, permanent finish ALL OVER THE CAR that you're accustomed to see on the fenders ONLY of ordinary cars. This new Jewett Brougham's finish needs no attention other than washing.

Two individual front seats, both folding forward. Chummy for two. Easy entrance and exit, both sides. Rear seat is 46½ inches wide—wide enough for three to sit in absolute comfort. Lots of leg room, both front and rear. Windows adjust easily to weather needs. Deep luxurious upholstery—and the cushions are removable to permit ample carrying space where the rear passengers normally sit. Think of the times such convenience is welcomed!

And remember—it's a Jewett Six! You know what that means—the liveliest closed car performance you ever saw. Full 50 h. p. Paige-built motor—more power for weight than any car at anywhere near Jewett's price—hence Jewett's amazing performance.

Jewett Six passes most any car on any hill; drives from 2 to 60 miles an hour in high; accelerates from 5 to 25 miles an hour in 7 seconds, in high. Over 60,000 Jewett Six owners revel in its astounding performance, admire its rugged construction.

This is the new Jewett Six Brougham, having 12 major improvements and 51 refinements that all new Jewetts have. Mechanically, Jewett is the wonder of the industry. Now this new Brougham at but $1325 sets another startling value standard for Jewett.

See this new Jewett Brougham. Drive it. Every true motorist will be delighted. It's the season's greatest sensation! Come in any time—or phone for an appointment.

A cut-away section of this new Jewett Brougham body is on display at our Exhibit, at the Coliseum, all this week

WASHINGTON, D. Engineering Policy Protects Car Owners from Drop in Value

"REO heads have believed for years that a manufacturer is in honor bound to respect the value of his product in the owner's hands throughout the entire useful life of the car," C. E. Eldridge, Chicago Reo distributor, told show visitors yesterday. "Radical changes in outward appearance seriously depreciate the value of the superseded product, and cause unwarranted loss to the owner.

"Our engineers have always been guided more closely by engineering principles and their anxiety to develop automobiles of extreme dependability and long life than they have by momentary fads among a few prospective owners.

"Take brakes as an example. Crowded traffic conditions such as we have here in Chicago require greater safety factors than were necessary even two or three years ago. Reo engineers have added generously to the dimensions of the brakes on all models for 1924. Fifteen inch drums with bands two and one-half inches in width, are designed so every square inch of brake lining has an effective contact with the drums and provides a positive control that surprises even the most exacting drivers.

"Careful, skillful designing of the chassis has lowered the frame one and three-fourth inches, with a consequent improvement in the general lines of the five models. Yet this refinement has been handled in such a manner that the graceful dignity of the earlier models has been maintained. Roadability and riding ease have been enhanced, but without radical changes or compromise in the functioning of every part of the chassis.

GOSSIP OF THE AUTO TRADE

UNUSUAL interest surrounded the Franklin-Butler exhibit in the Coliseum yesterday. The Chicago distributor has made a representative showing of the long line of Franklin inclosed cars. This line has pioneered the field of 1923 and '24 models and is considered one of the most complete in America.

Linking up the show with the row, the Packard headquarters on Michigan avenue has blossomed out with a special showing of inclosed jobs for the week. Some of the most attractive of the 1924 models are shown on the salesroom floor.

Among the foremost exhibition features found by the overflow crowd which attended opening day at the show were the new Haynes 60 sedan and the 60 sport brougham. Both models, fully equipped and embracing the latest refinements and improvements, struck record low price levels in the history of Haynes manufacture.

Smart appearance combined with the unusual safety qualities held in all steel bodies mark the exhibit of Dodge Bros. cars at the show. All of the models on display reveal the 1924 improvements in both motor and body work developed by the Detroit plant.

T. J. Rochford, Elcar distributor, told visitors to his attractive exhibit yesterday that women buyers are now dominating the entire field of automobile distribution. He cited figures to show that the big percentage of car sales in the last few months were made on the orders of women and that closed car sales are almost always the result of women's preference.

The Roy Iverson company, 2330 Michigan avenue, has been appointed distributor for the Anderson car in the Chicago territory.

Salesmen Lead List of This Car's Buyers

The monthly compilation of sales of the Paige-Detroit Motor Car company shows that salesmen bought more Paiges and Jewetts during September than any other business or labor classification.

Next in number of purchases were members of the labor classes, such as foremen, mechanics, machinists, miners, and mill workers, with the exception of members of the building trades. Executives and manufacturers came third in the buying.

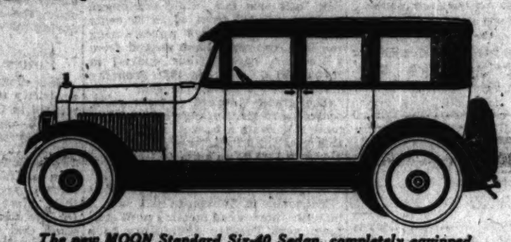
Pullman Now Builds Closed Bodies For MOON

Get this fact fixed.

An enclosed automobile, like a man's evening clothes and Caesar's wife, must be above suspicion.

We know, as do all automobile dealers and manufacturers, that in a highly competitive market many closed cars have been and are being produced which, because of compromises in construction and materials, must soon disappoint their purchasers.

We know, as do all dealers and manufacturers, that there are certain differences between fine closed car and open car building which must be recognized, acknowledged and coped with if the closed car is to give lasting satisfaction to the buyer. Everyone knows that flaws and faults which might be overlooked perhaps entirely in an open car are magnified to primary importace in a closed car, where every squeak, every rattle, every vibration is multiplied one hundredfold—where an inch too little space here or there, too little leg room, cushions at the wrong angle, or an omitted convenience becomes an annoyance great enough to impair even the value of the car itself.



The new MOON Standard Six-40 Sedan, completely equipped, delivered, war tax paid, in Chicago—Price.....$2,050.00.

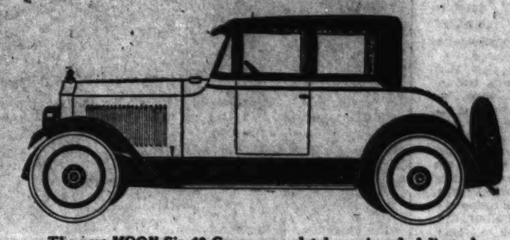
Current MOON closed cars are the finest closed automobiles MOON has ever built.

They are an outstanding exemplification of the fact that short cuts and makeshifts are not necessary in the production of a closed car to retail at a moderate price—provided the manufacturer enjoys sufficient volume to produce manufacturing economies.

There has been no compromise with construction, quality of materials, beauty or fineness of finish in the production of the MOON closed models for this season. Literally hundreds of dollars could have been cut in the production cost of any of these closed cars had MOON been willing to follow the course of many builders of the day.

Note, for instance, the slanting windshield in these new MOON closed models. You know the advantages of this detail. You know how in a closed car the straight up-and-down type dangerously reflects lights at night. You know how much easier the driver's vision is at all times with the sloping glass. You know the feeling of increased space and roominess in the driver's seat which the extra inches afford. Even on the cheapest open automobiles today the sloping shield is universal.

But in a closed car it means greatly added expense. Many builders—just check them up—have abandoned this advanced construction to save its cost. Every MOON body could have been produced at a very material saving on this detail alone, had we also been willing to sacrifice your convenience.

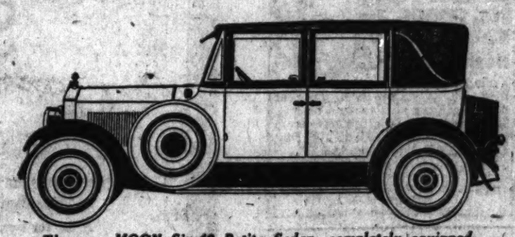


The new MOON Six-40 Coupe, completely equipped, delivered, war tax paid, in Chicago—Price.....$2,050.00.

MOON closed bodies are built by Pullman. You know as well as we what this means. Pullman builds only MOON and Packard enclosed bodies. These new MOON enclosed cars are offered in a wide range of interior finish. You can have broadcloth or velour if you wish, or, at no added cost, you can now have your Sedan or Coupe upholstered throughout in genuine handcrushed, long-grain Spanish leather, harmonizing in color with the beautiful Marine Blue of the exterior finish.

The costliest, best-looking, easiest-to-keep-clean upholstery which ever graced a fine closed car is this beautiful leather interior.

Yet, these better cars cost you only a very moderate sum. MOON price on closed cars, no less than on the open models, is made possible by the most tremendous popularity which has ever been enjoyed by a fine car in America. We sell in Chicago more MOON automobiles in the course of twelve months than many manufacturers sell in the same period through the United States. This is a matter of record, so it is possible to give you through the economies of large production an enclosed car of MOON quality without compromise and without apology at a cost no greater than you would have to pay for many cars of much lesser value.



The new MOON Six-40 Petite Sedan, completely equipped, delivered, war tax paid, in Chicago—Price.....$2,250.00.

We invite your inspection of these new MOON enclosed models. See them at the Show or any MOON dealer. The more you know of motor car construction, the more you will appreciate the beauty of the finish, the fineness of detail, perfection of upholstery, and the mechanical reliability of MOON automobiles.

FARM AND GARDEN

Vineyard Owners Find Graded Grape Increases Sales

Western Competition Spurs Michigan to Study Cost and Market.

By Frank Ridgway.

CHICAGO has been the dumping ground for a large percentage of the Michigan Concord grape crop and the grower has paid a heavy penalty. Since more than one thousand carloads of grapes—or one-sixth of the crop—from Michigan farmers go to Chicagoans, growers have recently decided they can afford to pay more attention to these customers across the lake.

Today, with a new state law that provides for standard grading and inspection under penalty, farmers believe marketing can be done to the advantage of both producer and consumer. This year's grape crop is the first to be sold under the new regulation, and vineyard owners already see the value of it. Under the old system of selling the fruit "unclassified," with both buyer and seller centering interest on price rather than on quality, the consumption of grapes has been held down to a minimum.

System Still Crude.

Michigan vineyardists have been increasing their production and struggling to broaden their market in order to sell in competition with other sections on markets hundreds of miles away. In assembling grapes at shipping centers in southern Michigan there is a natural tendency for the high quality of fruit to be loaded into cars iced and shipped over long hauls to New York, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, as well as cities in southern, western and northern states. Many lower grade grapes are left to be sold to buyers who ship in boats to Chicago, Milwaukee and other cities and towns along the west shore of Lake Michigan and to buyers who transport the grapes in trucks to towns in Michigan, Indiana and northern Illinois.

Horse trader's methods are still used on the open markets in the Michigan grape belt. Approximately half the grapes produced principally in Berrien and Van Buren counties, are sold by individual growers through the crude, unorganized system. Nearly all those sold to Chicago pass through the old system.

Belief in Lucky Star.

In their rush to feed the market more than 6,000 carloads of grapes within a period of about four weeks—throughout the latter part of September and the early part of October—farmers lumber down highways in trucks and wagons from early morning until night. Filing in from every direction, they keep market yards covered with a working mass of wagons, trucks, horses, grapes, and men.

Go to the open grape market in St Joseph, Benton Harbor, and towns along the lake shore where the fruit is loaded for shipment, and you will find the buyer and seller killing time standing around loaded trucks, whittling, kicking up the sand, and dickering over the price of grapes from sun-up to sundown. Each man is superstitious enough to believe he has a lucky star when he is on the market. The grower likes to take a gambler's chance and wait for a higher price; the buyer feels the same way and waits for a lower price.

Off in All Directions.

While this is going on in the market yards, down at the lake shore, along the canals, and in the freight yards boats are being docked and empty cars switched to sidings. By night the barterers have reached an agreement, and radiating in all directions the grapes start to move by train, boat, and truck to consuming centers.

Among these buyers are Chicago merchants, many of whom buy grapes in small lots of 500 to 1,000 baskets, and cross the lake in "mosquito fleets" during the night, reaching the Chicago docks in time for the early morning market.

Graded Product Boosts Sales.

Through the selling of a standardized, graded product this year for the first time, vineyard owners find this to be one of the best ways to increase sales. Lessons they learn with one year's experience interest them in seeing that their grapes reach the consumer in a satisfactory condition. They must do this in order to compete with California and other grape growing regions which ship fruit into the markets of the central west.

Pacific coast fruit men sold grapes on the Chicago market this season at a low price—in some cases for less than freight costs—in order to compete with local growers in the mid-western fruit belts. This kept the price down in Michigan, puzzling growers when they tried to figure out how California could pay freight over such a long haul—and it is necessary to use at least fifteen tons of ice to bring the grapes through in good condition—and sell in competition with fruit grown across the lake, less than a hundred miles from the city.

Getting Down to Figures.

Forced to take an interest in what the consumer pays for grapes in Chicago, in their eagerness to deliver a satisfactory product, Michigan growers began to estimate production costs and marketing, even to a fraction of a penny, from the time the grapes are set in the vineyard until the fruit is picked, packed, shipped, and delivered to the consumer's door.

In his office at St. Joseph, Mich., the other day, H. J. Lurkins, a practical grape grower and manager of the St. Joseph Fruit association, figured out in detail the various costs that enter into the production and sale of grapes. His figures are based on the costs and returns of a vineyard for the first ten years, assuming that seven average crops be harvested.

The cost of establishing the vineyard and bringing it up to the end of the third year is estimated at $300 [detail costs for the first three years have been given in a previous article, printed in this department, dealing with grape growing in Michigan].

The various annual costs per acre for the last seven years of the ten year period are:

Tying vines to the trellises	$ 4.00
Brush, removing and burning	1.00
Repairing trellises	2.00
Plowing	1.00
Hoeing and sprouting	2.00
Harrowing five times	*2.50
Spraying, including materials and labor	12.50
Fertilizer, including material and labor	9.22
Clover crop, including seed and labor	2.40
Interest on investment and land	25.00
Taxes	2.00
Total yearly costs	$63.65

The total cost for seven years would be $443.55, and the first three years' cost of $300 added to this makes a total of $743.55 for the ten year period. Assuming that the grower picks seven crops, it would cost $106.50 an acre. Mr. Lurkins says the average production per acre is 1,333 small four quart baskets. On this basis, using the cost of production figures given above, it would cost the grower 8 cents to produce a four quart basket of grapes.

The farmer also pays directly a part of the marketing costs, including the following items, on each four quart basket:

Small four quart baskets	$ .04½
Picking	.02
Hauling from the vineyard to the market	.00¾
Loading into car	.01
Total farmer's marketing costs	$ .03¼

The costs of the various charges, commissions and freight, after the grapes leave the producers' hands include the following items on each four quart basket:

Local buyer's commission	$ .01
Loading charge at local station	.01
Freight on boat from Benton Harbor to Chicago	.04
Chicago commission merchants' charge	.02½
Total	$ .08½

What the Grower Gets.

This brings the total—including 8 cents for producing, 3¼ cents to cover the farmer's marketing costs, and 8½ cents for commissions and freight—to 24¾ cents on a four quart basket. This includes all costs up to the time the grapes are turned over to the retailer who passes them on to the ultimate consumer.

Grape growers in Michigan received from 22 to 28 cents for four quart baskets at the local markets in the fruit belt this fall, while consumers in Chicago paid from 30 to 39 cents a basket. The growers' prices during the last few years have ranged from 9.7 cent a basket [four quarts] in 1914 up to 31.5 cents in 1921, dropping down to 21.6 cents last season.

The grape vineyard owner's costs, according to Mr. Lurkin's calculations, total 16¼ cents a basket, netting him this year 5½ to 9¾ cents a basket, or $76.59 to $129.87 an acre.

Dairymen Meet in Wisconsin.

Dairymen in Wisconsin will hold a boosters homestead meeting at Watertown next Tuesday preliminary to a cattle sale to be held the following day.

BASKET OF MICHIGAN'S GRAPE CROP—Thousands of hilltops and sandy slopes across Lake Michigan are covered with grapes like these. More than a half bushel of grapes are shown here on a single vine, with a few of the leaves picked off to expose the fruit. There are more than 4,000,000 other bearing grape vines loaded with a similar crop in Michigan this year. From 40,000 to 50,000 four quart baskets of Concords are being picked from this nineteen acre grapery on O. A. D. Baldwin's farm near Bridgman, Mich. Mr. Baldwin, shown here in the picture, thinks enough of the grape growing business that he is establishing a hundred acre vineyard in Berrien county.

Contest Fires Interest in Soil Improvement

The annual meeting of the American Society of Agronomy will be held in Chicago, Nov. 10 and 11. As a special inducement to encourage work along soil fertility lines the National Fertilizer association has offered eight county agents in the northern states trips to the meeting with all expenses paid, according to H. R. Smalley, western agronomist of the association. Between forty and fifty county agents entered this contest, competing in the work of developing the best soil improvement program. The eight winners who will attend the November meeting will come from the territory extending from New England to Kansas and from Kentucky to Minnesota. Prof. M. F. Miller of the Missouri College of Agriculture is among the four most prominent agronomists who will select the winners of the contest.

Vegetarian Rats to Uphold Vitamine Theory at Show

Among fall meetings of interest to truckers, gardeners, and orchardists is the annual horticultural show to be held at the greenhouse on the Purdue university grounds, Nov. 2, 3, and 4. The special feature of the show, which is to be held under direction of the Purdue University Horticultural society, will be the elaborate exhibits of fruit, flowers, and vegetables. The exhibits have been chosen so they will be interesting, practical, and educational. Twelve white vegetarian rats will be on exhibition to furnish proof of the abundance of vitamins in vegetables. Vegetable exhibits will be on display to show the crops that are in season during the various months in the year

Power Plans for Farms.

The committee on the relation of electricity to agriculture, recently appointed in Chicago following a conference of engineers, electrical experts, and farm leaders, will meet in Washington, D. C., next Wednesday and Thursday. During the conference members of the committee will consult various governmental departments in their effort to lay the ground work for the development of superpower plans that will carry electricity into the rural districts all over America.

GARDEN NOTES

Solid cabbage heads of the late varieties can be successfully stored, providing heads in late winter, by pulling up the plants with the roots attached and burying them upside down in a trench. Wrap the outside loose leaves around the heads, stack them in the trench three tiers deep, and cover with dirt and straw.

Cold frames or hotbeds are commonly used for storing brussels sprouts, cauliflower, and cabbage in winter.

Fall is a good time to plant peonies. They can be put in deep trenches well manured.

Ubiquitous Corn Cob Shines in Punk Field

Another use has been found for corn cobs. The properly ground with [illegible] cobs can be molded into various shapes and when dried the product [illegible] substitute for punk and other materials used in pyrotechnics, according to O. E. Sweeney, head of the chemical engineering section of Iowa State college. The process, developed at the college, is so inexpensive that chemists believe it will have a commercial value. Corn cobs can also be used as a substitute for incense, made as a love cake when cinnamon, oil of sandalwood, and heliotrope are added. Still another use of the cob is in making insect pest destroyers.

Helping Women -Innocent Victims of "Social" Diseases

This is a frank, plainly worded message to women who have contracted so-called "social" diseases. If you are one to whom such a misfortune has come, every word that follows is of the utmost importance to you and to your family.

These diseases are often acquired innocently and accidentally—it is possible through contact with an article like a drinking cup or a towel; very often through marriage with a person who has contracted the disease but who has not been cured.

Blameless women and little children by thousands are suffering untold miseries from these diseases, which are leading causes of insanity, paralysis, blindness and sterility, which plunge their victims to the depths of physical and mental misery and which kill 250,000 to 300,000 people yearly.

Hospital records show that at least eighty per cent of all pelvic operations performed upon women are caused by one of these infections alone and it is common knowledge that to this same disease is due the majority of childless homes and of blindness in children at birth.

If you have reason to believe that your trouble is due to a venereal infection, there is but one thing to do and that is to take treatment that you may forestall the most serious consequences. "Social" diseases can be cured. Even in advanced stages their progress can usually be checked.

No sense of false modesty should cause you to hesitate in obtaining medical attention. Every day of delay means further inroads of the disease upon your system. To postpone treatment is simply to allow a bad condition to grow worse.

The Public Health Institute offers you the benefit of every approved method that medical science has developed in the fight to eliminate these infections. The Institute, which was founded by prominent Chicago business men, maintains a staff of able physicians with completely equipped offices where consultation, advice and treatment are given under the most favorable conditions.

If you need such help as this, you will find a sympathetic understanding of your trouble on the part of our physicians, and you will be given the treatment best adapted to your case.

A New Department at 72 East Randolph Street Exclusively for Women and Children

To assure to women and children the most efficient attention, the utmost privacy and the highest degree of comfort, with women assisting as nurses and attendants, a department exclusively for women and children has been opened at 72 E. Randolph Street.

The Institute has already freed thousands of people from the grip of these scourges. There is every reason to believe that it can do as much for you. By coming for a consultation you can find out to a certainty whether or not you have contracted one of these infections, and if so you will be advised as to what should be done.

As the Institute was established not for profit, the charges are low so that this service is available to people of even the most limited means, and one patient pays no more than another for the same treatment.

$3,500,000 CLUB HOUSE PLANNED BY DEMOCRATS

Famous Iroquois to Have 4,000 Members.

BY AL CHASE.

Plans are under way by which the famous old Iroquois club, the great midwestern Democratic organization, may become the largest and most powerful political and social club of its kind in the nation. It is the hope of Dr. James Whitney Hall, president, that it will occupy a niche in Chicago's Democratic political and social life similar to that filled by the Hamilton club in the G. O. P. To do this, the scope of the Iroquois will be broadened until it becomes national in its influence.

DR. JAMES WHITNEY HALL.

The club membership will be increased from 400 to 4,000 and a $3,500,000 clubhouse project is under way. A site at the southwest corner of Michigan avenue and Lake street has been offered the club.

Twenty Floors of Democrats.

Jarvis Hunt has drawn plans for the proposed clubhouse calling for a twenty-one story structure with a tower. With the exception of the first floor, to be devoted to shops, the entire building will be used by the club or for Democratic uses.

It is hoped to make the new Iroquois club building the Democratic center for the city, county, state, and as much of the national activities as can be persuaded to come to Chicago.

Dining Room for Women.

The second and third floors will be used for a two story high lounge. Then will come a floor for women with a women's dining room, and above that a main dining room two stories high.

Above this will be six stories devoted to 300 sleeping rooms and offices used by Democratic organizations.

Founded Forty-three Years Ago.

The Iroquois club was founded in 1880 and first met in a building on the site of the present Peoples Gas building. It occupied various loop sites, among them being a building on La Salle, across from the Hotel La Salle. It is now housed in the one time home of the University club at 26 North Dearborn.

Its charter members included Melville W. Fuller, former chief justice of the United States; Potter Palmer, Henry Honoré, Levi Leiter, John Cudahy, Carter Harrison I., Lambert Tree and many others equally well known.

Mayor Dever a Member.

Among some of the present members are Mayor Dever, Cyrus McCormick, Charles Wacker, B. J. Rosenthal, James Hamilton Lewis, Robert Sweitzer, Patrick Carr, E. N. Hurley and Melvin Traylor.

PLAN NEW BANK FOR CLARK AND SEDGWICK COR.

A. C. Thompson, a director in the Chicago Trust company and active real estate operator and builder, has just complete remodeling the old three story building on the triangular block bounded by Clark, Grant and Sedgwick, at a cost of $150,000, from plans by Duckworth Brothers.

He now announces the formation of a bank for the fast developing district south of Diversey and west of Lincoln park, to be known as the Parkway State bank. A permit has been granted to organize. It will have a capital of $100,000 and will occupy the north section of the remodeled building, where Sedgwick runs into Clark.

V. H. Thiele, an official of the North Avenue State bank for seventeen years, recently resigned from that institution to become active in the organization of the new Parkway. Frank Schrage, a druggist in the neighborhood for forty-five years, also will be interested in the new bank.

The building will have eleven stores, all with entrances on both Clark and Sedgwick, and twenty-eight apartments on the upper floors. This is only a block from Lincoln Park west, where the three Lott hotels, the Belden, the Webster and the Parkway, are situated. There are several other hotels and apartment projects recently completed, under way or contemplated in the neighborhood.

Realty Jottings

William Zelosky will talk on "Subdivision and Acre Property" on Tuesday at the Y. M. C. A. School of Commerce real estate lecture course.

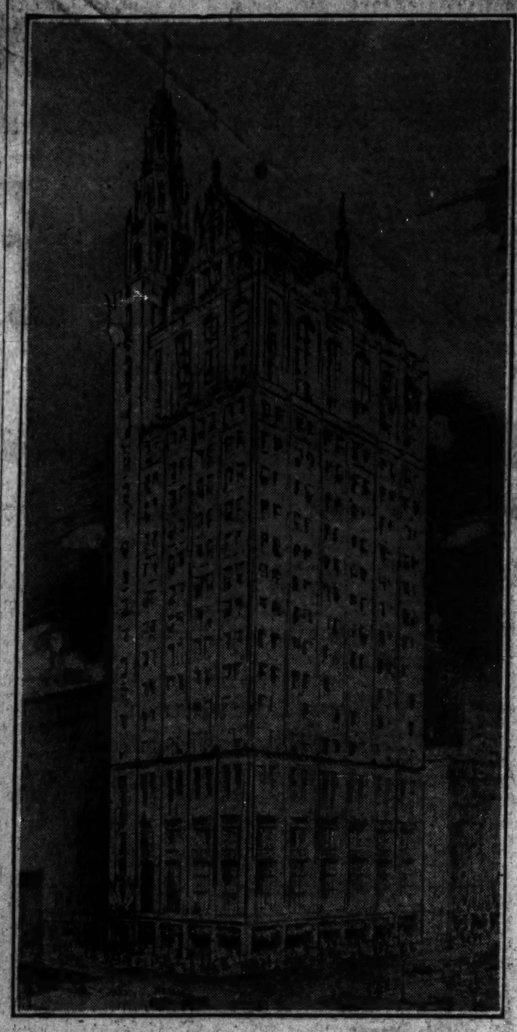
The Greater Harlem Avenue association has published an illustrated booklet, edited by Alfred Gordon, editor in chief of the Oak Parker, telling about the proposed rejuvenation of Harlem avenue. Free copies may be obtained at THE TRIBUNE Public Service bureau, 11 South Dearborn.

One licensed real estate dealer for every eighty residents is the record for California for the first seven months of 1923, according to a report made to the National Association of Real Estate Boards by the California Real Estate association. If this proportion held good over the entire country there'd be 1,342,982 realty dealers in the U. S. A. Three years ago California had one realty agent for every 120 inhabitants.

LEWIS HOMESTEAD SOLD.

Ruena and Frances Lewis, Mary Lewis Cox, and Eleanor Lewis Newton, daughters of the late Mr. and Mrs. William Lewis, have sold their home at 907 North Franklin, which has been in the family for more than seventy-two years, to Kmata Krancock. The sellers will move into an apartment building on Fenimo, near Lawrence, which they have bought.

New Iroquois Club



Above is Architect Jarvis Hunt's sketch of the proposed new home of the Iroquois club. More about this $3,500,000 project is told in a nearby column.

North Austin M. E. Church

Foltz & Brand are architects of the above new home of the North Austin M. E. church, at Waller and Potomac, the corner stone of which will be laid this afternoon at 3:30 by the Rev. F. D. Stone. The Rev. John Thompson of the Chicago temple will deliver an address. The Rev. C. A. Bloomquist is pastor. The new church will be of brick, with Bedford stone trim, and will cost $75,000. The organization is only four years old.

CORNELL AVENUE FLAT SALE.

Adolph Bame bought the six flats at 5429 Cornell in 1920 for $40,000. He sold them to Rose Colianni and Anne Bradshaw in February, 1923, for $51,500. They have now sold them to Delia Ai Evans for $60,000. P. D. O'Hern of the O'Hern-Freer company, broker.

Plan 49 Flat Building on Cornell Avenue, Near 54th

The Jackson Park Manor Building corporation has bought the 50x331 at 5530 Cornell from Otto B. English for $26,500, or $530 a front foot, said to be a record price, and will erect forty-nine flats, designed by William P. Doerr and William Reichart, to cost $180,000. The O'Hern-Freur company was broker. Wollenberger & Co. have negotiated a $135,000 loan.

Armour Sells Ridge and Davis Corner in Evanston

M. Cochrane Armour and Minnie H. Armour of Pasadena, Cal., have sold the old residence at the northwest corner of Ridge and Davis, Evanston, 143x210, to Richard O. Wolfe for an indicated $70,000, through Smart & Golee. The property is in the residence zone, so no flats or business buildings are planned.

Sell Thirty Apartments on Cambridge; $259,000

Charles F. Henry, builder, has sold the thirty flat building at 2512-20 Cambridge to Ida Kramer for a reported $259,000, taking in part payment her twenty-four apartments at the north west corner of Jonquil and Marshfield, at $135,000, subject to $79,000.

In turn, Mr. Henry sold the twenty-four flats to Richard Domke for $135,000, subject to $75,000, taking as part payment the twelve flats at 4735 Bernard at $70,000, subject to $18,000. Liepold & Hicks were brokers.

PLAN 585-ACRE MODEL 'SUB' FOR HOOSIER CITY

"Woodmar" to Have New Civic Wrinkles.

Indiana's great Calumet steel belt is shortly going to be visited by Old Doc Municipal Stork, and if all plans go aright the Hoosier press will soon have a notice reading more or less like this: "Born to Mr. and Mrs. Hammond Indiana, a 585 acre youngster, which has already been christened Woodmar. Everybody seems to be doing nicely."

"Woodmar" is going to be the largest and most comprehensive, one of the best laid out and most attractive subdivision communities in the steel belt. And it'll have features that will be worth the while for some of our Chicago subdividers to take notice of.

Turnouts for Busses.

One of the novel features of Woodmar will be the motor bus turnouts, devised by Roscoe E. Woods of Woods, Martin & Co., Hammond real estate dealers and sponsors of the Woodmar Realty company, which is putting Woodmar on the map. Mr. Woods figured motor busses would operate on Woodmar streets and, remembering how traffic is tied up when they stop at corners, he has had turnouts at each corner so the big vehicles can swerve in and stop and regular traffic speed by while passengers are getting on and off. There's a novelty, we believe, which Chicago might look into.

City Planner Jacob L. Crane Jr. of Chicago laid out Woodmar with two big north and south boulevards, 250 feet wide. Instead of the regulation alleys he has laid out a town with small parkways back of all the houses where children may play instead of in the motor infested streets and play in safety, for cars will be barred in these private playgrounds.

Street for Trucks.

Truck traffic will be barred from most residential streets, but Mr. Crane has gone farther and provided a "truck thoroughfare" where they may drive on a pavement made extra strong.

No billboards will be permitted in Woodmar. The community will be thoroughly zoned and every lot restricted. A landing field for airplanes will be set aside. Main arterial streets will be wide, but the pavements on streets where traffic for some years to come will be light will be narrow.

Woodmar comprises the old Knickerbocker farm and other property at the extreme south end of Hammond, being entirely inside the city limits. It is bounded on the south by the Little Calumet river. A bus line will run to Hammond's loop.

SUBDIVISION TO BE OPENED NEAR ROUTE OF NEW INTERURBAN

Within the next thirty days, according to real estate men in close touch with affairs in Highland Park, that suburb is to hold a special election to consider the question of annexing a large strip of territory west of the present limits.

The proposed Chicago, Milwaukee and North Shore new interurban line from Chicago to Waukegan will cut through the proposed new section of Highland Park. One of the first subdivisions to take advantage of the annexation project will be Sunset Manor, to be placed on the market by the Lake Towns Improvement company.

Lawrence P. Romano and M. F. Schiavone of that concern have just taken title to two tracts of land adjoining the right of way of the contemplated new interurban line. This right of way runs parallel to and east of the Northwestern's "Mayfair cut-off."

The two parcels are on opposite sides of Deerfield road. Twenty-one acres were bought from John Mooney and 42½ from Francis Yager. It is presumed the North Shore will have a station at Deerfield when the new line is built several years hence. The 135 lots in Sunset Manor will average 100x150.

Buys Winnetka Acres for "Shore Lane" Subdivision

Claude W. Morris has bought for $60,000 from the Central Trust Company of Illinois, trustee, a piece of vacant in Winnetka, 297-311 Sheridan road, with a frontage of 230 feet, extending back 507 feet to Lake Michigan. Mr. Morris will use part for a residence for himself and subdivide the balance into lots of about a third of an acre each, restricted to residences costing not less than $20,000. Each house must be of brick or stucco, with no rear porches. Garages must be part of the house. A private road to be known as Shore lane will run through the subdivision.

WEST MADISON LEASE.

Harold B. Wakem and Louis M. Strauss, operating as the Newark Electric company, have leased the store at 226 West Madison street for five years at a term rental reported to be $43,225. The Leander J. McCormick estate is lessor. Jerome J. Jenkins of J. J. Harrington & Co. represented both parties.

TEMPLE THEATER TO HOUSE FILMS; $327,000 RENTAL

Balaban & Katz Overbid Orpheum Circuit.

Three more whopping big playhouses, two to house films and the other vaudeville, and a new medium sized legitimate theater seem assured Chicago as a result of a spectacular battle between movie and vaudeville magnates for the proposed new 3,500 seat theater in the $5,000,000 Masonic Temple to be erected on the site of the Iroquois (now the Colonial theater).

It was generally understood by those who knew that the Orpheum vaudeville interests, which have long contemplated a huge vaudeville house to replace the Palace, which would then be given over to legitimate, would be the tenants of the new Masonic playhouse. Yesterday it was announced that Balaban & Katz overbid them at such a terrific advance that even the Orpheum interests, wealthy as they are, didn't care to meet it.

$327,000 Annual Rental.

The movie firm is to pay an annual rental of $327,000, or $16,350,000 for the fifty yer term. This is about $6,288 every seven days. It is presumed that the new house eventually will take the place of the Roosevelt, a small house, under a comparatively short term lease.

Another interesting angle to the story is the fact that the Orpheum already is looking for another site for a huge playhouse. And in addition it is known that Paramount, now building one of the world's finest film theaters in New York, wants a larger Chicago house than McVicker's, which it recently subleased, and an announcement of plans for another magnificent movie for the loop is expected shortly. As reported two weeks ago, a new theater will be built somewhere in the loop to handle Colonial bookings. So Chicago seems likely to get four new theaters instead of one, as originally planned.

Contract for Lease Signed.

A contract for a lease of the Temple theater has been signed by Barney Balaban, Herbert L. Stern, and Samuel Katz. Harry J. Farnham and Frederick T. Kuhn were brokers; Sonnenschein, Berkson, Lautmann & Levinson and Beach & Beach, attorneys. As announced last month, C. W. and George L. Rapp will be the architects.

TRIBUNE TOWER CONCRETE TO BE SET BY EXPERTS

Proper Mixing Assured for First Time.

A report made last night by cement experts supervising concrete placing in the Tribune Tower is as follows:

"The first test cylinder, which was only seven days old, crushed at 2,770 pounds compressive strength per square inch before it broke. This would indicate that the compressive strength per square inch in twenty-eight days will be in the neighborhood of 4,940 pounds. By way of comparison, ordinary concrete saloons test around 1,000 pounds per square inch. The Tribune set out to make the finest grade of concrete that could be produced. They expected around 4,000 pounds. They have exceeded that by almost 1,000 pounds.

"Our engineers figure that each one of these caissons will support a load of 13,570 tons, which is equal to the weight of three and one-third large trains of cars. Since the cylinder which was tested was taken, the amount of sand being used has been further reduced and still greater strength expected."

For the first time in the history of Chicago building one of its skyscrapers is being erected with all of its concrete properly and scientifically portioned, mixed and placed under the careful eye of cement experts furnished by the Portland Cement Association and the Structural Materials Research laboratory at Lewis Institute. This is the new Tribune Tower on Upper Michigan avenue. At the same time exhaustive tests are being made of samples of the concrete used in the Tower.

The amateur home concrete mixer is in luck that his concrete is not quite thick enough and lets it go at that. As a result he usually gets flat, soupy and loses about 35 per cent of the strength.

But he always assumed that the concrete used in our big downtown structures was mixed as carefully and scientifically as a careful housewife mixes a cake. If he saw soupy concrete being poured in a loop office building scraper he took it for granted that it was of the proper consistency.

Strength Lost in Mixing.

Now comes official word from eminent experts, however, that no structure has ever been built in Chicago in which the concrete was scientifically mixed, and as a result in practically all the big jobs in this city the concrete lacks the strength it would have if it had been mixed exactly in the right proportions of water, cement and sand.

H. F. Gonnermann, expert from the Structural Materials Research laboratory, jointly maintained by the Lewis institution and the Portland Cement association, at a dinner given at the Hamilton club by L. S. Trainor, district engineer of the Portland Cement association, made some startling statements.

"Our investigations, covering a period of several years," he said, "show that many contractors are losing from one-half to three-quarters of the strength that the materials would develop if they were rightly proportioned and properly mixed.

Too Much Water Used.

"We find after thousands of experiments that too much water is a most serious and common fault. A slight pint too much water will have the effect of taking two or three pounds of cement out of a one bag batch."

Mr. Gonnermann explained that the architects and contractors on the Tribune Tower have been shown the exact amount of water that should be used to achieve a scientific result, bringing about the top notch in strength. Mr. Gonnermann and W. D. Allan, expert in concrete construction, are constantly taking samples and having tests made of the concrete used in the Tower. If it runs too soupy orders are given to make it thicker.

Results Closely Watched.

As this is the first time concrete has been proportioned, mixed and placed under expert scientific supervision that will insure the highest results obtainable with the present knowledge of concrete, it is expected these results will be watched closely by architects and contractors, not only in Chicago but throughout the country.

TRIBUNE TOWER CONCRETE TO BE SET BY EXPERTS

Proper Mixing Assured for First Time.

A report made last night by the cement experts supervising the concrete placing in the Tribune tower is as follows:

"The first test cylinder, which was only seven days old, carried 3,770 pounds compressive strength per square inch before it broke. This would indicate that the compressive strength per square inch in twenty-eight days will be in the neighborhood of 4,940 pounds. By way of comparison, ordinary concrete caissons test around 1,500 pounds per square inch. The Tribune set out to make the best grade of concrete that could be produced. They expected around 4,000 pounds. They have exceeded that by almost 1,000 pounds.

"Our engineers figure that each one of these caissons will support a load of 13,570 tons, which is equal to the weight of three and one-third large trains of coal. Since the cylinder which was tested was taken, the amount of water being used has been further reduced and still greater strength is expected."

For the first time in the history of Chicago building one of its skyscrapers is being erected with all of its concrete properly and scientifically proportioned, mixed, and placed under the careful eye of cement experts furnished by the Portland Cement association and the Structural Materials Research laboratory at Lewis institute. This is the new Tribune Tower on Upper Michigan avenue. At the same time exhaustive tests are being made of samples of the concrete used in the Tower.

The amateur home concrete user trusts to luck that his concrete is thin or thick enough and lets it go at that. As a result he usually gets it too soupy and loses about 35 per cent of its strength.

But he always assumed that the concrete used in our big downtown structures was mixed as carefully and scientifically as a careful housewife mixes a cake. If he saw soupy concrete being poured in a loop skyscraper he took it for granted that was the proper consistency.

Strength Lost in Mixing.

Now comes official word from cement experts, however, that no structure has ever been built in Chicago in which the concrete was scientifically mixed, and as a result in practically all the big jobs in this city the concrete lacks the strength it would have if it had been mixed exactly in the right proportions of water, cement, and sand.

H. F. Gonnermann, expert from the Structural Materials Research laboratory, jointly maintained by the Lewis institution and the Portland Cement association, at a dinner given at the Hamilton club by L. S. Tramor, district engineer of the Portland Cement association, made some startling statements.

"Our investigations, covering a period of several years," he said, "show that many contractors are losing from one-half to three-quarters of the strength that the materials would develop if they were rightly proportioned and properly mixed.

Too Much Water Used.

"We find after thousands of experiments that too much water is a most serious and common fault. A single pint too much water will have the effect of taking two or three pounds of cement out of a one bag batch."

Mr. Gonnermann explained that the architects and contractors on the Tribune Tower have been shown the exact amount of water that should be used to achieve a scientific result and have been told about the top notch in strength. Mr. Gonnermann and W. D. Allan, an expert in concrete construction, are constantly taking samples and having tests made of the concrete used in the Tower. If it runs too soupy orders are given to make it thicker.

Results Closely Watched.

As this is the first time concrete has been proportioned, mixed and placed under expert scientific supervision that will insure the highest results attainable with the present knowledge of concrete, it is expected these results will be watched closely by architects and contractors, not only in Chicago, but throughout the country.

ARCHITECTURE

BY ARTHUR WOLTERSDORF, (F. A. I. A.)

This column on architecture is written for The Tribune by Mr. Woltersdorf, representing the Chicago chapter of the American Institute of Architects.

That Chicago may some day have a great free cathedral, an interdenominational church, where not alone Protestant sects would worship, but Roman and Greek Catholic and followers of the Jewish faith as well, is the hope of the Rev. Von Ogden Vogt, expressed in a talk before the Chicago chapter A. I. A., at its October meeting.

This beautiful dream he hopes will some day be realized in Chicago. He would have this a truly civic church and would like to see it become a civic shrine with memorials to Chicago's great, whose ashes would be preserved in columbaria in the church or in the cathedral close, a modern Westminster abbey.

Born in Illinois, at 13 spent the summer working in a World's Fair plaster shop, graduated at Beloit college, later at Yale with M. A. and B. D. degrees, author of "Art and Religion," lecturer on architecture and esthetics, and at present pastor of the Wellington Avenue Congregational church in Chicago.

These are milestones in the life of the Rev. Dr. Vogt. The listeners were spellbound as Mr. Vogt, developing his theme, showed the interrelation of spirituality in architecture, art, and religion. The speaker's ten years of travel in Europe and America as representative of the United Societies of Christian Endeavor have given him a breadth of view, a knowledge of historic monuments and modern striving in ecclesiastical art that is held by few indeed among the clergy.

He pleaded for truth in architecture as equally essential as truth and sincerity in religion. He instanced a beautiful Gothic church in Connecticut which he had seen constructed, where a steel column supporting a steel roof truss was later enclosed with molded Gothic stonework with foliated capital supporting plaster ribs and groins, giving the observer the impression of stone pier and vaulting. The untruthfulness of such stage scenery prevented him from praising God under this camouflage. Cannot modern designers enclose the steel column and call the room in a manner to express honestly the structure within?

Unity of art and religion was a personal need. Art needs religion, for religion attempts to gather feeling for the whole of reality. Mere beauty is incomplete without religion, for the ethical content is lacking. This cleft must be bridged.

He pleaded for the restoration of the genuine art of worship, the art of liturgy. Mr. Vogt is interested in the drama and encourages miracle plays for church congregations.

He paid a tribute to the Chicago plan commission. The speaker said he lived in no neighborhood; he lived in a vicinity; people had no neighbors in a great city today. He would create many neighborhood centers, each with a branch library, not in a cheap store but in a suitable impressive building; he would have the police and fire stations on this square, a neighborhood hall, and the church. Thus he would create neighborhood interest and neighbors.

Sheridan and Lawrence Corner Sold; $165,000

Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Pieratt have bought the northeast corner of Lawrence and Sheridan, improved with fifteen flats and eighteen individual garages, lot 100x136, from Frank W. Brenckle for a reported $165,000. Cook & Matheson and Harrison & Reidy were brokers.

LONDON GUARANTEE GENERAL OFFICES NOT TO BE IN NEW BUILDING

The London Guarantee and Accident company, which is now completing its big building at the Michigan avenue bridge plaza, intended to house the general offices of that concern, has changed its plans and will move its national headquarters to New York City.

Originally it was the intention of the big English risk concern to use the sixteenth, seventeenth, eighteenth, nineteenth, and twentieth floors. It was found, according to an official of the company, that New York would be a more suitable place for the company's headquarters and so rented quarters are to be used in the east.

The western department of the company will be moved from the Corn Exchange building to the second floor of the new Michigan avenue structure. Above 100 employes and officials will be taken east.

MILWAUKEE AVENUE LEASE.

S. D. Jonas has leased the 100x125 at the southwest corner of Diversey and Milwaukee and will erect a 100 car garage to cost $250,000. He has leased it for ten years at a term rental of $67,000 to Thomas M. Sawyer and brother.

GRAIN TRADERS GROW BEARISH AS NEW CORN STARTS

BY CHARLES MICHAELS.

Bearish sentiment is increasing among grain traders, and is especially pronounced in corn due to the impending movement of the new crop with four cars of new grain received here for the day and one car of old and new mixed with sales at 80@93c for sample grade. Minneapolis had a car of new corn from North Dakota. Last year the first car at Chicago was received on Oct. 19, and sold at 73½c for No. 2 yellow.

Futures made their highest prices of the day early and the lowest toward the close. Realizing sales were much in evidence and there was a lack of aggressive buying until after prices had dropped over 1c. Closing trades were at losses of ¼@⅝c on wheat, ½@⅝c on corn, and ⅛@⅜c on oats. Rye was ⅛c lower to ⅛c higher.

While all deliveries of corn, May and July wheat, and July oats sold at new high figures on the crop the last week, the upturn was not maintained and at the last wheat was ⅛@1¼c lower, with corn off ⅛@¾c, oats ⅛@⅝c, and rye 1⅛@1½c lower than the finish of the previous week.

New Factors Needed in Wheat.

Some new influence is regarded as necessary to get the wheat market out of the rut. The political domination of the market is not increasing outside buying, and on the swells there is a good class of selling, with many traders expressing the belief that the law of supply and demand will ultimately determine the trend of values.

Canadian government crop report showed 478,000,000 bu, or the same figure as the September returns, which caused such consternation to the local bulls and was largely responsible for a break of nearly 10c per bu. December closed at $1.04⅝ and May at $1.11⅝@1.12⅝. Export demand continues slow. France canceled hard winter at the seaboard and failed to replace with Manitobas.

Fear New Corn Movement.

New corn is commencing to move to terminal markets at a fair rate. Two cars were reported as having been shipped from South Dakota to Chicago, and with the forecast for frost overnight in some sections of the belt, the trade anticipates that every effort will be made to get new grain in as fast as possible to take advantage of prevailing high prices.

Old corn dropped 1@5c here, with receipts 218 cars, of which a good part was applied on to arrive contracts. Messages from the interior were generally of a bearish character. Trade in futures was largely of a routine character, with October $1.00 at the last. December closed at 76c to 76⅞c and May at 74½c.

Oats market is in a rut and fluctuations are largely a reflection of those in corn. Trade is mainly local, with nothing in the news to cause independent price movement.

Rye held within narrow limits, sufficient eastern buying developing to prevent a full response to the decline in wheat.

Light Provision Trade.

A moderate cash trade is being put through in provisions, with the continent and England buying. Houses with export connections sold a little October and January lard early, while packers bought. Trade was not large, and at the last lard was 2½c lower to 3½c higher, ribs unchanged to 5c higher, and bellies 7c higher. Prices follow:

PRODUCE MARKETS

Butter prices in Chicago advanced ½c on Saturday to 47c for fancy creamery. Egg values were unchanged, with a fair trade, and live hens were off another ½c, making 1c in two days. Trading in all lines of produce was fair, although sales of fruits and vegetables were not taken as readily, owing to the rainy weather.

White potatoes sold at 5c advance, with arrivals 145 cars, and 300 cars were on track, a reduction of 54 cars from Friday.

WORLD'S GRAIN MARKET NEWS

In the absence of new stimulating influence in regard to the government's plans for disposition of the surplus of wheat new buying was more restricted, and traders who bought early sold out at the last making a break. Those who sold early took profits and were the sustaining influences in the late trading. It is the belief of the trade in general that new stimulating influences are necessary to hold values.

A moderate increase in the visible supply of wheat is expected on Monday. The continued piling up of stocks makes those who have not favored government assistance in advancing prices feel more bearish.

Local corn traders are inclined to be bearish and a few think that highest prices on corn early have been seen. Corn, however, has acted contrary to all expectations of late and the trade is a little skeptical about getting too bearish on the cash situation as the movement is dependent largely upon weather conditions.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace in his speech before the International Farm Congress at Kansas City said depressed economic conditions abroad will result in impaired exports.

Bartlett Frazier say there is altogether too much wheat in the world for importing countries to absorb in their present depressed financial condition. The corn market had a rapid and substantial advance the last week and extreme caution should be used in making purchases at this level of values.

The weekly weather forecast for the Ohio Valley and Tennessee is for generally fair weather with temperatures slightly above the normal for the upper Mississippi river and lower Missouri valleys mostly fair with temperature normal or above except below normal over the southern portion Monday.

A Chicago grain man who has been over the northwest says that the corn crop in Minnesota and South Dakota is in fairly good shape to move. There is a large yield there, and Minnesota is becoming a dairy state to an extent that will absorb the greater part of the coarse grains. Farmers in Minnesota, he says, are doing well where they have diversified their crops and gone into dairying. In North Dakota, where they have followed this rule they are also doing better.

CENTRAL POWER STATIONS HURRY PASSING OF COAL

BY SCRUTATOR.

News of revolutionary changes in the steam engine, including the use of mercury vapor in place of steam in part of the units, which has percolated from the laboratories of an electric company, serves to call attention to a climacteric series of improvements, recent and under way, in the venerable machine, which is more than anything else responsible for life as we know it.

Just as the sailing ship made its greatest progress after the steamship came in, the steam engine has undergone its greatest improvement since the internal combustion motor, big and little, began to dispute its sway, and water power again challenged its primacy as a prime mover.

The clipper ship developed the speed and the big schooner the economical freight capacity long before the steamship caught up with either, and it looks now as if the steam engine, in greatly modified form, is destined to lead the Diesel, the producer gas engine, and other motors for a long time to come.

The steam turbine coming in with the new century, after generations of futile attempts at a rotary engine, was the great step forward in the engine. Improvement in fueling and the boilers has been the dominant note in the last few years.

Steam boilers that evaporate 300,000 pounds of water in an hour are a long way from the "monsters" of the World's Fair period. Steam pressures have gone up from James Watt's six pounds to 300. The Commonwealth Edison is contemplating 1,200 pounds pressure in future installations. An experimental steam plant has been constructed to operate at 3,200 pounds pressure and 700 degrees Fahrenheit temperature, at which point water just simply becomes steam on the instant, without any boiling to it.

All these changes mean more power and less coal. The world's flight from coal makes the recent "flight from the mark" look like a sack race.

A kilowatt hour to a pound of coal is the goal to which the improvers of the steam engine are headed. To this end the boiler and engine units are growing ever bigger, and before long it is believed the turbines will be so big that the boiler, turbine, and generator will constitute a unit of machinery.

The improvement in the prime mover is made possible by the improvement in electrical transmission, which has enabled engineers to develop power in an ever decreasing number of plants. As small power plants are scrapped and more industries are put on the load of central electric generators the incentive and the capital for boiler and engine improvement increases progressively.

If the new mercury engine becomes a commercial success its general installation will not be held back by its increased cost, as would have been the case a generation ago. There will be comparatively few to install. All will be of immense size and the economies of fuel and of mercury made possible by the concentration of power units will make the change easier to finance.

The extent to which power making is being concentrated may be realized from the fact that of 4,491 steam electric generating plants in this country eighty-one, with a capacity of 50,000 watts or more each, have 63 per cent of the entire generating capacity. When one speaks of electric generating capacity today it is of an ever increasing part of the whole amount of power used in industries. Some of the big power plants are now producing a unit of electricity from one and a half pounds of coal, while the smaller plants must consume from two and a half to five pounds per unit of energy produced.

Less than 25 per cent of the amount of coal needed to produce a unit of energy twenty years ago is now required. At this time far reaching experiments are being made by the government and by private corporations in fueling operations, which will further lessen the quantity and quality of coal required. The use of powdered coal promises much, both in increased heat efficiency and in economies of stoking, to say nothing of the lessening of the smoke nuisance.

But the concentration of power production makes it more feasible to do away with coal altogether. Like other industries, producers of electric power are turning to oil. Naturally Texas is ahead in this respect, having much oil and little coal or water power. But in New York far from oil, close to coal and water power, the consumption of fuel oil in electric power plants has increased from 40,000 brls in 1920 to 500,000 this year based on consumption for the first six months.

FINANCIAL NOTES

Prices in yesterday's stock market lost ground for the eighth consecutive day. The average of twenty leading industrial stocks is now within a small fraction of a point of the year's low record. Little incentive was given to trading in stocks save for the one exception caused by announcement of another price cut in the automotive tire industry. The reduction was made by the Firestone Tire company, and is 15 per cent on large sizes. After brief, desultory selling of some of the rubber company stocks the flurry was over, and the market closed with total transactions for the day near the lowest mark yet reached this year.

No new reason was known for the selling of the motors. Studebaker yielding a point on the day and Chandler being hammered down 2 points to 45, a new 1923 low, despite the fact that the full dividend was officially reported as earned in the first six months of this year. New lows for the year were established by Central Leather preferred at 39¼, Auto-Knitter at 11¾, Replogle Steel at 9, American Ice at 85¾, Columbia Graphophone preferred at 17¾, Lee Rubber at 14, and Mathieson Alkali at 35¼.

There were a few strong spots in the industrial list, notably Pacific Oil, which moved up 1¾ to 29½, on buying understood to be associated with plans of another large oil company. Gains of 1 to 2 points also were registered by Allied Chemical, Beechnut, Chesapeake preferred, International Harvester, Jewell Tea preferred, Tidewater Oil, and Union Tank Car preferred, the turnover being small in most cases. Fisher Body jumped 3½ points, to 158.

Active United States government bonds found buying support and advanced moderately. Many observers believe there is considerable buying for the British account on dull days, both on the exchange and by over the counter transactions. The few transactions recorded in the foreign group were at fractionally higher prices, the bulk of the business being in French issues.

The Magnolia Petroleum company reduced the prices of high gravity crude 20@50c a barrel. New prices posted for oil of from 33 to 39.9 gravity are $1.10 a barrel, a reduction of 20c, and for 40 gravity and above $1.25 a barrel, a cut of 50c. Prices of lower grade crudes are unchanged.

A special meeting of stockholders of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco company has been called for Nov. 12, to vote on a plan of splitting up the common and common "B" stocks on a basis of four shares of new $25 par stock for each share of the present $100 par stock.

The Gulf, Mobile and Northern railroad declared its first dividend to stockholders since the road has been in operation. The dividend is 1 per cent on preferred stock, payable Nov. 15. The Scotten-Dillon company declared an extra dividend of 3 per cent in addition to the regular quarterly dividend of 3 per cent. This makes 20 per cent paid so far this year.

CHICAGO CURB MARKET

While trading in the local unlisted security market continued on a fairly broad scale, price changes, with few exceptions, were without definite trend and confined to a narrow range.

Butler Bros. after selling in the neighborhood of 35¼ for the major portion of the week, relinquished ¼ point, to a close of 34¾ bid, 34½ asked. Burrus common, at 38¾ bid, 39¼ asked, was 1½ points lower. Transactions of Fairbanks-Morse were reported at 49 and 50. Surrouhs Adding Machine again was wanted at 150, with odd lot offerings at 132. Northwestern Yeast changed hands at 190 and 195. Beatrice Creamery was quoted 61 bid, 63 asked, with no sales reported. Creamery Package was fractionally improved at 32¾ bid, 33¾ asked. Kellogg company common, on a light volume of trade, rose some 3 points, to 20½ bid, 21¼ asked. Albert Pick preferred sold at 96. The bid price of Acme Steel Goods common improved a full point, to 78, without attracting possible sellers. Offerings of By-Products Coke at 45 failed to bring out definite bids.

The motor and accessory shares were erratic, many issues scoring substantial gains, while others suffered moderate declines. Motor Products was the outstanding feature, advancing some 12 points to high sales and a close of 150. Ford of Canada was in demand, advancing from 428 to 440. This gain was later partly eliminated, closing at 435. Paige-Detroit was weak, losing 1¼ points at 18¼ bid, 19¾ asked. Timken Axle was fractionally easier at 6¼ bid, 6¾ asked. Some few trades of Rickenbacker Motors were again reported at 9.

Sugar shares were quiet and without important change. Closing bid and asked prices follow: Columbia, 6¾, 6¾; Holland-St. Louis, 5¼, 5¾; Michigan, 9¾, 9¾; Utah-Idaho, 3¼, 3½.

Public utilities were firm, but trading was of a limited volume. American Light and Traction common again sold at 116 and 117. Commonwealth Power, Railway and Light common was a point higher at 33 bid, 34 asked, but the Commonwealth Power corporation preferred was off ½ point at 71½ bid, 72½ asked. Some few transactions of Illinois Traction were reported at 52¼—up 1½ points. Tri-City Railway and Light preferred was also a point improved at 85½ bid, 86½ asked.

RAILROAD NOTES

Investigation by the interstate commerce commission of the feasibility of consolidating railroads into eighteen or twenty systems will be concluded at hearings here beginning Nov. 1.

Reorganization of the Detroit, Toledo & Ironton railroad, with Lima as the central division point between Detroit and Ironton, was unofficially announced. Under the proposed plan Springfield and Napoleon are eliminated as division points.

The Public Service company of Northern Illinois filed application with the Illinois commerce commission for permission to construct and operate a transmission line from Kankakee to Momence, in Kankakee county.

The Southern Railway company asked for permission to nominally issue $5,000,000 development and general mortgage 4 per cent gold bonds, series A, payable April 1, 1978.

Top and average hog prices, yesterday, advanced 5c at $8.30 and $7.80 respectively, being closer together than at any time of the season. Sales were largely steady to 10c higher, mixed and packing grades sharing in the full strength, while in between and commoner grades of light closed comparatively weak, after urgent orders were filled. The few strictly choice light on sale met ready outlet, with pigs and underweights strong to slightly higher. Prevailing prices were mostly on a level with the previous week's close, all of Monday's and Tuesday's loss being regained. Top at $8.30, stands 10c under previous Saturday, while average at $7.80, shows 5c advance.

Last week's hog receipts at 172,700 were the largest since early in August, showing an increase of 22,500 over previous week, 56,100 over a year ago and 39,900 over the ten year average. The week's shipments were largest in over a month at 41,800. Estimated average weight of hogs last week at 241 pounds dropped two pounds below previous week, equaling the lightest in three months and showing a gain of fifteen pounds over the ten year average. Last week's prices averaged $7.65, lowest in nearly two months, $1.45 lower than a year ago, and $2.80 under ten year average.

Week's cattle receipts at 74,400 were second largest of the year. Western rangers at 18,000 decreased 2,000 compared with previous week, while natives increased 16,000. Native beef steers for the week declined 35c@$1.00, with yearlings showing least decline and choice heavy most weakness. Range cattle closed about 25c lower. Top steers reached $12.80 and best yearlings reached $12.00. Some great rangers made $8.25. Native butcher stock closed 25@40c lower, while bulls advanced some and calves 25@50c over a week ago.

Sheep Receipts Decrease.

Sheep receipts last week at 132,000 were smallest in about a month, showing a decrease of 9,500 as compared with previous week and 22,300 as compared with three weeks ago. A larger proportion of this range ewes arrived in this week's shipments, serving as a bear in the feeder division, with the result that closing prices paid for feeding ewes were fully 50@$1.00 under a week previous. Fat sheep were generally on a level with a week ago, while killing lambs were steady to a shade lower. Feeding lambs met a narrowed outlet and experienced a slight drop in value at the close, inbetween kinds showing the most loss. Yearlings were steady.

Receipts for Monday are estimated at 20,000 cattle, 30,000 hogs, and 30,000 sheep against 30,111 cattle, 56,216 hogs, and 36,138 sheep a week ago and 26,748 cattle, 42,545 hogs, and 24,522 sheep a year ago. Next week's receipts are estimated at 72,000 cattle, 170,000 hogs, and 120,000 sheep, against 74,526 cattle, 172,695 hogs, and 126,355 sheep the corresponding period a year ago.

Probable receipts of hogs for Monday range from 28,000 to 34,000. R. W. Oake marked 32,000, W. S. Nicholson and J. M. Waters 42,000, F. W. Waddell 44,000, H. H. Moore 46,000, W. H. Cherman 46,000, E. S. Waterbury 47,000, Lester Armour 49,000, T. T. Brown and A. G. Weidner 50,000, Fred Young 52,000, and F. Flynn 54,000.

Hydro-Electric Bonds.

The demand for use of electric power is constantly increasing. The growing demand for the services of public utilities, together with the growth of urban population, is constantly increasing this demand for electric current. Streets, buildings, and homes more and more are being lighted by electricity, and the many electrical devices which are becoming household conveniences and necessities require electric power. This power is more than ever used in mining, quarries, and industries where portable power is required. Railroads are electrifying their terminals in large cities and on certain sections of road. Everything seems to point to a continuing increase in the demand for electric current.

More and more attention is being given to the country's vast water power potentialities for generating electrical energy. The cheap operating costs of large hydro-electric plants often enables them to supply power to enterprises more cheaply than they have been able to generate their own power in the past. The same often is true in the case of public utilities in the vicinity of a large hydro-electric plant, which controls all the available water power supply.

A good many hydro-electric bond issues are floated in these days for the construction of new plants. Once in operation, these plants as a rule operate more cheaply than steam plants, but the cost of construction of the hydro-electric plant usually is much greater than that of the steam plant, one reason being that the steam plant can be built near the center of its market, while the hydro-electric plant invariably is at a distance. As the original investment is of necessity large, it is important to the investor that the future earnings should be reasonably certain, at least during the life of the bonds. If the industries using most of the power are mines, quarries, lumbering, etc., the plant's income will suffer when these industries are exhausted. The company should guard against any such contingency by having sufficient diversity of consumption for its electric current.

Another factor which may vitally affect future earnings is competition. If conditions are such that another company may secure a water site within competitive distance it is important that a sufficient number of contracts for selling power should be secured, extending beyond the life of the bonds, to insure fixed charges. Such contracts are essential to the proper protection of the bondholder. On the other hand, where the demand for power is growing rapidly profits would be curtailed considerably if the company were rigidly tied up in long time, low priced contracts. In a territory, therefore, that is developing commercially and industrially, it is very advantageous to have short termed contracts for everything above the amount needed to insure fixed charges.

These are a few of the things that should be borne in mind when considering the purchase of bonds of a new hydro-electric project. As the enterprise is untried and the risks have not all been tested, the dependence on the project, first on the reliability of the engineers' estimates, and, second, on the available market for the power supply, necessitates a very close examination. When the interests that control the water supply also control the industry these risks are materially lessened.

How Much Are Your Bonds Earning?

As every experienced investor knows, it is not the interest rate alone but the final yield that counts in determining income.
Here is an ingenious chart that takes the place of the bulky and complicated bond yield tables for which investors have had to pay from $2.50 to $5.00.
This chart shows yields of from 3% to 10%, and can be used on maturities ranging from 6 months to 30 years. A supplementary interest table shows accrued interest at rates varying from 3% to 10% per annum.
We shall be pleased to mail one of these charts without obligation to any investor who is interested.

Read the 10 Reasons which make these bonds "The Safest First Mortgage Real Estate Gold Bonds issued"
1 The U. S. Government is the tenant and never fails to pay rent when due.
2 Each government contract of lease extends beyond the final maturity of the bonds.
3 In each case the income of the building is 2½ to 3½ times the greatest interest charges.
4 Rentals are paid by the Government direct to the New York Trust Co., Trustee, which sets aside money for interest and serial principal payments as they fall due.
5 Each issue is an absolute closed first mortgage.
6 Each property is valued largely in excess of the bond issue.
7 Locations of buildings in the business centers of large cities (corresponding to the "loop" in Chicago) assure increase in property values.
8 Serial maturities of bonds increase the margin of safety of each issue year by year.
9 Provision is made in each building for additional space to meet growing requirements of the Post Office Department.
10 Full insurance and title guarantee policies are assigned to the Trustee for protection of bondholders.
If you have securities being called for payment within 30 days we will accept them now at par and accrued interest in exchange for bonds.

The New York Times

New York, Oct. 13.—[Special.]—The week ended in character, with conflicting movements on nearly all parts and with prices on the stock exchange flitting in opposite directions from one another, but on the whole not greatly changed. Most of the changes of a point or more were attributable to nothing but the adjusting of the individual speculations by groups or individuals who had been stirring the market during the week.

Foreign exchange rates ended the week with as little definite uniformity of tone as they had shown ever since last week's closing. The franc and the lira rose, and sound sterling declined rather sharply, and the mark swung back and forth between three and one-third and five billion marks for the dollar.

Germany Keeps Up Inflation.

If there were any further interest in the geometrical progression of Germany's paper inflation and in its bearing on the intrinsic value of the mark the relchsbank's statement for the closing week of September would provide it. A week before the outstanding paper currency had been slightly over eight and one-half quadrillion—an increase of 200 per cent. Since this statement indicates the position of a fortnight ago and since the rate of weekly addition to the currency has been progressively larger week by week a little calculation will show that toward of 250 quadrillions must now be outstanding. The government's operations are sufficiently indicated by the fact that the reichsbank's discounts, which previous largest weekly increase was eight and three-eighth quadrillions, rose in the week reported on by almost three-three quadrillions.

U. S. Foreign Trade Is Good.

One other interesting statement was published today. Our own country's foreign trade returns for September showed a surplus of exports over imports amounting to $126,000,000, as against $35,000,000 in August, and a monthly excess of imports as large as $56,180,000 as recently as May. Merchandise exports of $381,000,000 were the largest for any month since March, 1921. Merchandise imports, amounting to $255,000,000, on the other hand, were the smallest for any since July, 1922.

The resulting excess of exports was the largest favorable trade balances shown since that for October, 1921.

This excess of exports more than wiped out the $30,000,000 import excess for the first eight months of the year and left a credit of $96,000,000. For the first nine months of 1923 exports totaled $2,941,000,000 and imports $2,205,000,000.

Illustrating What High Power Really Means

The 1924 Coach-Touring Reo is on exhibit only at the Reo Branches and Dealers. Other closed models also being shown this week at the Coliseum

Why the 1924 Reo Motor Furnishes More Than Twice Its Rated Horse-power

Few things are more confusing to the motor car buyer than the term "horse-power." The confusion is due to the fact that there are two common ways of figuring it.

The method used for license purposes is the S. A. E. rating and consists of multiplying the cylinder diameter first by itself, and then by the number of cylinders. The product is divided by two and one-half to get the so-called S. A. E. horse-power rating.

This chart illustrates the relation between the S. A. E. rating of the Reo and the horse-power developed at customary touring speed—the latter more than twice the former

On this basis the "horse-power" of the Reo—and of practically all six-cylinder cars—is about 25. This figure has no meaning whatever to the car owner as far as actual motor power is concerned.

In fact, the work of power engineers at present is focussed on diminishing the S. A. E. rating of motors while increasing the actual horse-power.

This is true not only of automobile motors for the public, but of special racing motors as well.

The Real Horse-Power

The only true way of determining actual motor power is by test with a device known as a dynamometer. This instrument will show varying power at varying speeds, and widely varying power for motors of similar size but different construction. The real horse-power of the Reo at the customary touring speed is more than twice its S. A. E. rating.

Special Reo engineering features, such as the giant intake valves, make its power much higher than its size would indicate.

ABOVE, the size of intake valves commonly used in the reduced horse-power motor.
BELOW, the unusually large Reo intake valves

Giant intake valves step up power

The Reo giant intake valves increase power over 25% as against the 1½- and 1¾-inch valves commonly used on other six-cylinder motors.

They are in-head valves, so large that they give their cylinders a full draught of gas practically instantaneously.

The resulting step up of power is heightened by the Reo extra size exhaust valves which dispose of waste products of combustion with exceptional speed and thoroughness.

Reducing carbon costs 60% to 70%

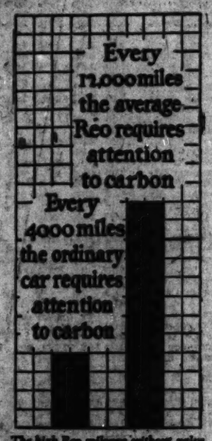
The Reo alloy pistons provide a third step up of power.

Ordinary pistons gather carbon which quickly lessens power. On Reo alloy pistons carbon does not gather because it cannot find a foothold. It goes where it belongs, into the exhaust.

The first result of this fact is greater and more constant power.

The second is a great reduction in upkeep costs to the Reo owner.

As a rule, six-cylinder motors have to have the carbon cleaned out and the valves ground every 4,000 miles. The average Reo owner seldom has to do anything at all about carbon short of 10,000 or 12,000 miles. And even then there is very little to do.



The high Reo mileage without carbon attention, due to Special Reo design and Reo materials, means not only greater power, but also lower upkeep costs and greater freedom from trouble

Service costs of $25 for 25,000 miles

Service costs of $25 for 25,000 miles are commonly reported by Reo owners in Chicago. This condition bears a direct relation to the high resale price of Reo used cars.

Reo owners are so well satisfied with their purchases that very few used Reo cars are ever offered for sale. When they are offered, they command an exceptionally high price.

A few days ago a Reo owner asked us to sell for him his Reo Coupe which he had run 19,000 miles, because he wanted a Reo Sedan. It was sold in a day for only 15% less than he paid for it. The total depreciation for him amounted to less than is generally figured on the average new car that has been run 500 miles.

Reo sales this year in Chicago 247% of last year

This great increase is coming from owners of other cars who buy the Reo because they want more power, more comfort, lower upkeep, and lower depreciation.

Service costs of $25 for 25,000 miles are commonly reported by Reo owners in Chicago, an average of 1-10 of a cent per mile

A New Winter and Summer Model for $1535

The 1924 Coach-Touring Reo with its enclosed body, as illustrated, built by a Chicago maker of fine coach bodies, provides four-door convenience, thoroughly balanced closed car construction, and the rigidity essential to luxurious silence—for $1535.

The problems that have troubled other coach-makers have been solved in the Coach-Touring Reo by designing the frame members on exceptionally ample lines and by utilizing the new knowledge of wood that airplane construction has made available.

The top rails and back supports of the coach unit must have unusual strength and rigidity—they are therefore made of cabinet ash. The bows must be absolutely warp-proof; they are therefore made of kiln-cured poplar. The liner ribs must stay as true and flat as steel bands and yet be lighter than any metal; they are therefore made of thoroughly-seasoned and flaw-free white pine.

The acoustic lining of the top must be sound-absorbing and rumble-proof, yet it must provide a firm and unalterably smooth base for the outer fabric; it is therefore made of Jersey felt.

The outer fabric must withstand the extremes of winter and summer weather for many years; it is therefore made of Zapon moleskin.

In these and many other ways every detail of coach convenience and coach value is provided in heaped-up measure—and, in addition, there are the rare and much-desired luxuries of summer comfort, exceptional silence, and four doors.

The Reo Safety Creed

We believe that driving an automobile in the streets of Chicago is a privilege and not a right.

We believe that like any other privilege it should be forfeited if it is abused.

We believe that everyone, whether car owner or hired driver, who repeatedly drives at dangerous speeds should have his privilege forfeited.

We believe that everyone, whether car owner or hired driver, who passes street cars in defiance of the law should have his privilege forfeited.

We believe that everyone, whether car owner or hired driver, who drives an automobile while intoxicated should have his privilege irrevocably forfeited.

We believe that if these manifest things are done, the number of automobile accidents in Chicago will be swiftly and radically reduced.

Where, O Where Shall Auto Park, Now Big Problem

Cities, Big and Little, Find Question Difficult to Answer.

BY JOHN IHLDER.

[Motor Development Department, Chamber of Commerce of the United States.]

A FEW years ago automobile salesmen talked about the saturation point in terms of the public's buying power. They calculated the possible number of automobiles in a state by the number of families with a certain income. Today such figures, except as applied to the rural population, are going into the discard. The saturation point for automobiles is reached by the incapacity of streets not only in cities, but even in towns and villages, to hold more cars.

We have suddenly awakened to the fact that the interesting game of regulating traffic, while the more dramatic, is not the more important part of our problem. The more important part is to find out what to do with automobiles, not when they are moving, but when they are standing still. Until some inventive genius invents a collapsible car that can be folded up and put into the hall closet or a corner of the office this question of what to do with an automobile when it is not in use is going to cause more and more concern to manufacturers and salesmen and to would-be owners than ever has been caused by justices of the peace with a keen eye for local revenues.

Even Worries Small Towns.

Of course we have been making tentative and superficial efforts to answer this question for some time, but with results so unsatisfactory that in the largest cities car owners have given up the attempt to drive to their offices near the center and even in moderate sized towns the merchants, the police and the car owning public are most dissatisfied with these results and with each other.

So recent is our realization of this problem that there are regulatory authorities who still approach it from the point of view that the automobile owner is more or less of a nuisance who should be thankful for whatever facilities are grudgingly granted him, and some traffic experts who maintain that inasmuch as two or three riders in an automobile take up more space in a city street than do several times that number in trolley cars or subway trains, therefore the answer is to limit more and more strictly the use of automobiles in downtown areas, perhaps confining it to taxicab, which, being more constantly in use, serve a greater number of passengers and call for only a fraction of the parking space.

Of course such a solution as this is no solution, but is rather a method of intensifying conditions that make for further overcrowding of our already overcrowded business and apartment house areas. The means immediately available for dealing with the standing automobile are limited and, are largely in the nature of more or less unsatisfactory expedients.

Must Keep Streets Free.

The first requisite is to approach the problem from the point of view that the automobile, passenger car as well as delivery truck, is a necessity of modern life and that our purpose is to facilitate its use. The degree in which various expedients may be used will vary in different cities and towns according to local conditions. There are, however, some generalizations which may be used as guides.

FIRST, the streets are designed primarily for transit. Consequently they must be kept free from standing

DUNES HIGHWAY AND INDIANAPOLIS AVENUE GET OFFICIAL ACTION

ONE more month will bring about the long-delayed opening of a good paved road from Gary to Michigan City through the dunes, according to reports received from the Indiana state highway department. All but two miles of the beautiful Dunes highway is now complete. The road is open to traffic from Baileytown east into Michigan City, but lack of detour roads makes it impossible to open any of the completed pavement to the west.

Until it is opened the best detour routes are via 21st avenue in Gary or via the Lincoln highway to Valparaiso and north.

Good news for the Chicago motorist is also held in announcement from the federal engineer's office that Indiana will immediately resurface Indianapolis avenue from the state line west of South Chicago through the "five points" to Whiting, and will improve Calumet avenue straight south through Hammond to the Lincoln highway. Eight blocks of the main artery leading out of South Chicago is still one of the worst stretches of road in Illinois.

Finds Knots in Traffic Impede City Prosperity

F. H. Caley Reveals Great Economic Losses in Slowness.

AMERICAN business interests, in neglecting the work of improving city traffic, and overlooking almost completely its effect on industry and commerce, according to a statement made to industrial leaders of Ohio by Fred H. Caley, executive secretary of the National Motorists association.

"Business has been laboring tirelessly to improve railroad, steamship and other forms of major transportation," Mr. Caley said, "but it continues to overlook city traffic, which is closely related to the three basic elements of prosperity—capital, raw material and labor.

"Capital, the first of the three basic elements of prosperity, is automatically attracted to those cities where wide, well-paved streets, effective traffic regulations and logical safety measures are the rule. Capital flows readily to the community of orderly and efficient progressiveness because conditions are more favorable to a profitable return.

"Raw materials, the second element, is more directly affected. The motor truck has come to play a vital part in the transportation of basic products of the mines, farms, forests and quarries; and to such an extent that its influence as a result of inefficient city management of traffic has already acted as a stumbling block to industry and business.

"Labor, the third element of prosperity, requires ready access to its place of work. When a city bids for a new plant one of the first questions asked is, 'What of transportation?'

Mr. Caley concludes that business has a very important duty to perform with respect to improvement in city traffic. The public, which he likens to the management of the community, should eliminate the causes of traffic danger, congestion and blockade, just as the plant manager would seek to eliminate any factory conditions which would affect the free movement of the product from one process to another.

XXIV. WINTER TOURS FOR HARDY FANS

With the advent of mass production in closed cars, the changing seasons have ceased to regulate automobile travel. Road conditions alone govern this modern division of transportation, and these conditions are improving so rapidly that the Chicago driver will find it possible this winter to use his car every day in every way.

This map, compiled from official sources and last minute reports of construction progress, gives a picture of highway conditions both at home and abroad. Hundreds of tourists are planning trips to California via the southern route and to Florida, although road conditions in the south make the far eastern route advisable.

The insert shows concrete road progress in Illinois. These pavements will be kept open all winter by maintenance crews and will offer unobstructed going. The map is another valuable page for your log book.

Instant Success Greets Premier Closed Car Show

200 Thoroughbreds of 1924 Vintage Viewed by Capacity Crowds in the Coliseum.

By J. L. Jenkins.

CHICAGO'S first closed car exhibit opened in the Coliseum yesterday with a brilliancy rivaling that of the national automobile shows.

More than 200 inclosed cars, as new as the 1924 season and combining all of the grace and mechanical perfection developed in the "peak" year of American engineering, greeted the capacity crowds of opening day. Attendance from the moment Coliseum doors swung open exceeded all expectations and promises to set new records in exhibition interest during the show's run this week. The exhibit will be closed today but will reopen tomorrow and continue through the week, closing Saturday night.

Forty-three Chicago distributors are exhibiting their feature models under the auspices of the Chicago Automobile Trade association. Fifty-four makes, all exclusive closed car creations, are on display. They range from the lowest priced coupe to the most expensive cabriolet, with a price scale of $950 to $15,000.

Attractive Setting for Cars.

Artist Tietsel, whose studio at Evergreen Park has been the workshop in the preparation of decorations for all of the national automobile shows held in Chicago, has excelled his best efforts in the embellishments for the dealers' exposition.

Huge paintings and some of minor proportions are used profusely in the picturesque scheme. The setting forms a wonderful background for the automobiles and the people who view them.

At the south end of the Coliseum is a painting 120 feet long and 20 feet high, the subject being an open landscape. A painting of a Rocky mountain pass appears at the north end. The balcony front features a series of airy figures, blossoms, and various landscapes, 800 feet long and 10 feet high.

The balcony and ceiling of the Coliseum are covered completely with painted canvas which adds individuality to the exhibits. The color scheme is green, white and gold, with various tones of crimson and pink.

Five hundred lampshades, each three feet in diameter and of art glass effect, with blossom design, enhance the beauty of the dressing. As a whole these are more brilliant than any ever seen before at an automobile show. The scheme on the first and second floors of the annex is along the same lines as in the Coliseum proper.

On the division lines of the main floor of the building groups and columns of large vases with foliage and blossoms set off the exhibits. The supports for the vases are picket fences finished in various tones of bronze.

Better Body Lines.

In general most of the cars shown have one feature in common, pointed out as enhancing the grace and dignity of the models for 1924. This is the high radiator with the hood line running clear back to the windshield and is shared alike by the lowest priced sedans and coupes to the most formal of cabriolet and brougham.

Visitors observed a distinct lack of "freakishness." On the contrary, the manufacturers apparently concentrated their efforts toward comfort and convenience. The seats are wider and more roomy than possessed by previous models, with a greater perfection in the springing than has been reached before.

It was also observed that auto fans are becoming more and more wise each

A Feature of the Display!

The Nash Four Door Coupe

The widespread interest aroused by the new Four-Door Coupe has caused us to arrange a special exhibition of this model at the Enclosed Auto Show.

Make it a point now to come to the Nash exhibit and see this original Nash conception of a beautiful enclosed car.

Inspect the new engineering improvements, the artistic execution of the gracefully modeled body, and observe the wealth of equipment refinements.

The body is painted in either rich maroon or sky blue, handsomely set off by black running gear and fenders.

Note the rear-view mirror, the new instrument board with panel glass assemblies, sturdy, capacious trunk, new flush-type vanity case and smoking set and many other attractions.

The long, rolling fenders dip further downward both at front and rear and emphasize its low-swung appearance.

Note also that the price is exceptionally low in comparison with this great value.

Nowhere else are you offered the broad measure of value Nash has embodied in this Four-Door Coupe. See it this week at the Show.

year. They seem to know nearly as much about the technical angles of motor cars and motoring as experts delegated to explain the intricacies of the models.

A few years ago the woman who had more than a superficial knowledge of the motor car was a rarity. The modern woman, it was apparent yesterday, permits no masculine superiority in this respect. It was noticeable that the woman visitors, and even many of the boys and girls in the crowds, ask their own questions about transmission and carburetion, the newer braking, and the like.

Approve Happy Medium.

Major interest naturally centered in the moderate priced closed car. The zeal of the automotive maker is reflected in every department in the quest for improvement and from every standpoint the 1924 car is a distinct improvement over its predecessor.

The close-coupled car seating four or five people and variously styled a coupe, brougham, sedanette, is unquestionably the most popular body type, and, being a cross between the coupe and sedan, is likely to largely take the place of both.

A feature of the show is the display of the Rolls-Royce, which makes its first appearance at an American exposition in connection with the exhibition of cars of all makes and prices. Visitors are enabled to study the very best the old country produces in contrast to our own productions.

Studying the custom body jobs at the show, it will be found that there is a marked tendency toward long, finely drawn lines, suggestive of speed in all types, even in the smaller coupes and cabriolets. The color schemes are startling, not so much for their brilliance as for the cleverness and sometimes for the daring of the new combinations.

Among the mechanical innovations, straight-eight motors, four-wheel brakes, sleeve valves, improved spring suspension, including rear cantilevers as long as the wheelbase of some automobiles, are outstanding features.

Leaders Promote Safety.

The committee includes, with H. P. Branstetter, Joseph F. Davis and J. R. Histed. L. L. Fest, who has been identified with the national show since its inception, is the active manager.

One of the greatest lessons of the exposition as exploited by Henry Paulman, president of the trade association, is that of safety. Many of the cars on exhibition are equipped with four-wheel brakes and other braking improvements designed to reduce the number of mishaps, major and minor, that occur during the daily course of travel.

As spaces were assigned by drawing numbers from a hat, the exhibits are not placed according to production as is the practice at the national shows. The luck of the draw yielded choice positions to many of the cars that have hitherto been forced to take less conspicuous spaces.

Feed Box Tips About Auto Depression Fail to Excite This Dealer

"About ever so often," A. C. Barber, Overland dealer, told show visitors yesterday, "some particular friend, who is not in the automobile business, tells you that he has confidential information that the federal reserve bank board has just had a meeting and members have notified their friends that the automobile business has reached the slowing up point and will soon begin to go backward.

"This statement was made to me this morning and was very amusing owing to the fact that this company has just closed the largest month's business of any in our history, and more so owing to the results that we are obtaining from the new model called the Champion.

"More sales have been made the first days of October than we ever hoped for in our dreams. Do these facts make us believe our pessimistic friend? THE TRIBUNE slogan—1921 will reward fighters—applies today just as it did then. The fall of 1923 and year 1924, we believe, will surpass the calculations of the most optimistic."

HIDDEN TROUBLE.

Automobile owners should watch their radiator hose. Many times it looks perfect from the outside, but when inspected thoroughly is found to be rotted away on the inside, causing the circulation to be blocked.

'They Won't Walk'; Cities Must Add to Street Space

Wider Thoroughfares Called the Only Cure for Traffic Ills.

THEN fundamental facts will make the movement of traffic impossible in the business sections of fifty American cities within five years' time, unless these facts are immediately recognized. These are:

1. Four million automobiles, added to 13,000,000 in use this year, will be augmented by the production of more than 4,000,000 in 1924.

2. Retail merchants will soon wake up to the fact that their front doors are barricaded by six or eight automobiles, the property of six or eight owners, while sixty or seventy customers are roaming around the streets looking for a place to park.

3. Every old fashioned, bulky car owned and driven by father will be replaced by at least three motor cars, adding two for mother and the children.

4. No policeman, silent or noisy, will be able to handle the traffic that is coming. Only millions and millions of feet of new street floor space can possibly take care of the congestion that is impending.

5. No workhouse sentences nor reduction of speed will solve the problem. More floor space and higher speed for automobiles is absolutely necessary.

6. Street cars and crowded streets are now obsolete except as incubators for automobile prospects. They are turning them out of the shell at the rate of ten thousand Ford owners every day.

7. The question of the saturation point in motor cars can only be answered in three words—"They won't walk."

8. Taxpayers will wake up to the fact that the cost of parking spaces outside of the congested area, and wider streets, will double, then triple, then quadruple, as the real estate owners discover the necessity for providing more floor space. Millions can be saved by any city that takes the first step.

9. No motor cars will be parked at the curb. Most streets will be one way streets. Taxicabs will be as thick as mosquitos on a July night.

10. The growth of population and the volume of business in any city will be in direct ratio to the amount of space provided for the movement of transportation.

Here Are Some Hints on How to Keep Car Running in Winter

The automobile today, without doubt, has become an all year round necessity. However, there are a number of things the driver must do or he will materially damage his car during the winter months. Following are a few suggestions which should be followed if the automobile is to be kept in first class running order:

1. Change the oil every 250 miles. During the winter months the danger of gasoline passing the pistons and diluting the crank case oil is much greater than during the summer.

2. Increase the charging rate of your generator. In cold months lights are used much more and the starter is run longer, draining more current from the battery than is usual. A higher charging rate to replace power used is necessary.

3. Have the carburetor adjusted to cold weather conditions. It is nearly always necessary to increase the richness of the mixture during the winter to secure proper power.

4. Thin out the oil in the rear axle and transmission by adding cylinder oil. During the fall and winter the oil thickens with the cold and does not reach bearings and gears as easily as when warm.

5. Buy a pair of chains and use them as needed. Their cost is excellent insurance against an accident.

AT THE WORLD'S TIP

Here's why cars in the annual Pikes Peak hill climb can negotiate the dizzy heights of America's most famous mountain at forty miles an hour. The picture shows one of this breath-taking turns where cars enjoy a slight downgrade even while climbing the remarkable motor road that leads to the peak. This road is among the most remarkable engineering achievements in the highway building game.

More Home Brew.

Gasoline bootleggers are operating on the outskirts of Los Angeles, Cal. The bootlegger buys casinghead gasoline at the oil field for 9 and 10 cents a gallon. It is then either blended with benzine or kerosene or sold straight. The result is a wild and dangerous fuel, causing the motor to backfire and overheat.

Complete Equipment.

According to several manufacturers of automobiles, the 1924 models will have everything on them that the average driver wishes. Bumpers and spotlights, combination stop and tail lights, windshield cleaners of all varieties, cigar lamps, and double tire carriers are among the things to be carried by some companies.

Fresh Air Fiend Who Scoffed Now Uses Closed Car

Old Timer on Auto Row Tells of Development of Today's Models.

LOUIS GEYLER, Chicago Dort distributor, who has been a prominent figure on automobile row for the last nineteen years, has watched the development of the closed car since the first one appeared on Chicago streets.

"Back in 1905 there was no such thing as a stock closed car, and even if there had been it would not have sold," said Mr. Geyler. "In those days people rode in an automobile to get fresh air. There wasn't even a top or a windshield. Look back at the early automobile advertisements and you will see the motorists all rigged up in goggles and dusters.

"The first automobile top that I remember was a hard, square one set on four uprights. It was called a canopy top. When you would hit it up to twenty-five or thirty miles an hour, it would tear the body. After the canopy top came the cape top, then the windshield, and finally some one invented isinglass sides that no one could see through. This was really the start of the closed car.

"The first closed car I ever sold was as big and clumsy as the ark and about twice as heavy. We thought it was some car in those days, though. This car was so heavy that there were times when the motor couldn't pull it. I couldn't get the fresh air fiends interested. They refused to be cooped up, as they said. Well, when I remember those old closed cars I can't blame them much.

"I can recall people saying that the closed car would never be a success, and I have had even more tell me that they would never ride in one. I smile when I see these same people riding in closed cars today. As a matter of fact, the old idea that a closed car is necessarily stuffy and hot has been completely overcome, because the public now realizes that it is possible to get as much air and sunshine in a closed car as in an open car.

"The demand for the closed car, which has grown tremendously since the automobile companies have been able to put this type in big production and lower the price, will increase in even greater proportion next year. You will notice that the tendency now is to have the whole car inclosed. Even in the case of expensive chauffeur driven cars, the chauffeur is now protected from the weather. Only the taxi driver sits out in the open.

"I firmly believe that during the coming year fully 85 per cent of cars priced at $1,000 or more will be closed jobs. I know from my own experience that once a closed car is sold, the owner seldom goes back to the open car."

Double the Service.

Minnesota trunk highways are serving more than eight vehicles this year for every seven using them a year ago, and more than twice as many as five years ago, according to the newly completed traffic census on the 7,000 mile system as made public by Charles M. Babcock, state highway commissioner.

Sees Day at Hand When Open Car Will Be Higher Priced

BY L. J. BROOKING.
[Oakland Distributor.]

THEN time is not far distant when open cars will cost more than closed. While this statement may sound as though all the laws of economics were about to be overturned, the fact remains that it is true and any automobile manufacturer who is awake to the trend of present day buying can prove it with sound, economical reasons.

This will be made possible by the increased production of the closed models. Within a few years the majority of cars made by the leading manufacturers will be of the closed type and the open touring car and roadster will be the occasional car in the assembly line.

This will enable manufacturers to price the closed models so that they will be much lower than at present and the open car will be forced to carry the increased cost of manufacturing now tacked on to closed models by many companies. However, until this date appears, and it will be some time, the up to date manufacturer with open models will find a good ready sale for his product if his construction is such that it permits the adaptation of good curtains for storm and winter use.

In the 1924 models of Oakland, both of these factors have been taken into consideration. The closed cars are priced low.

Million a Mile Tunnel to Link Crack W. S. Road

Will Drill Under James Peak to Complete Victory Way.

WHEN the famous Moffat tunnel, soon to be drilled through the Continental divide under James peak at a cost of $1,000,000 a mile, is in operation in 1926, a transcontinental motor route through canyons will be opened twelve months of the year instead of the five months in which the highway is now declared accessible. Hundreds of miles of road across desert sands encountered on the southern route to California will be eliminated, according to the Rocky Mountain News.

Although the Moffat tunnel, the fifth largest transportation tunnel in the world and longest in America, will cut the rail distance between Denver and Salt Lake City 173 miles and open a new route from Chicago to the Pacific seventy miles shorter than the existing line, it is estimated by highway experts that the benefits to be derived from the tunnel as an automobile highway will exceed the entire cost of its construction.

By the expenditure of $6,720,000 to drill 6.04 miles through solid granite, the Colorado tunnel commission will lower the tracks of the temporary line of the Moffat road [Denver and Salt Lake] over the Continental divide about 2,500 feet and open an uninterrupted winter route for carrying automobiles through the tunnel at an elevation of 9,100 feet instead of a few months accessible through Berthoud pass at an elevation of 11,330 feet.

The Moffat company is to provide cars especially built for the transportation of automobiles, and all trains are to be drawn by electric locomotives, eliminating smoke and gases that would result if engines were operated under their own power. The tunnel will be used in connection with the proposed Victory highway, running from Wilmington, Del., to San Francisco. It is proposed by the Victory highway association to make this the world's greatest highway.

Passing through Washington, D. C., the highway will continue through Wheeling, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Kansas City and Denver, where it is provided to continue west over Berthoud pass, through Steamboat Springs, Salt Lake City and Reno to San Francisco.

Completion of the Moffat tunnel is eagerly awaited by those fostering the Victory highway, as it is the only link in the proposed route that might block the plans for the greatest highway in the world. The tunnel should be completed in three and a half years with present improved engineering appliances.

Because of the scenic beauties, camping, fishing, and wholesome atmosphere, automobile tourist travel Western Colorado is annually increasing and the section is fast becoming the motorists' Mecca.

In touring from Denver to Hot Sulphur Spring by way of Berthoud pass the road rises from Golden to Lookout mountain, at the summit of which is the grave of Col. Cody (Buffalo Bill), and winding across a rolling divide for fourteen miles the road drops abruptly into a deep cañon and follows the river. Five miles from the town of Empire the road begins the ascent of a long, steady grade to Berthoud pass, reaching the summit of the Continental divide sixty-four miles from Denver at an altitude of 11,300 feet.

The remainder of the route to Hot Sulphur Springs is through scenic mountain country. Steamboat Springs is next reached over a section of the Midland trail and the Moffat highway [part of the proposed Victory highway].

At Steamboat Springs begins the much heralded Rabbit Ear road, completed in 1915. It is an important link in the Moffat highway from Denver to Salt Lake City and is the shortest route by 150 miles between the two cities. It is possible for automobiles to make the trip from Denver to Salt Lake City in three days, making Steamboat Springs the first night.

Calls It "Painless."

A set of tires costing $150 may run 10,000 miles on average roads. The same set will run double that mileage on improved roads. . . . Where the roads are unimproved, each 100,000 car owners spend $7,500,000 a year on tires, which they otherwise would save. Proponents of the argument say that a tax on gasoline, spent on roads, is the one and only "painless tax."—Rushford Record.

WORK-BENCH

FEEDING OF YOUNG CARBURETORS.

BY ERWIN GREER.

A LITTLE water in the fuel will cause a lot of trouble. Water is heavier than gasoline and settles at the bottom, therefore when the fuel is low in the tank any water is likely to be drawn to the carburetor.

Stale gasoline is the cause of more trouble than most drivers realize. A good grade of fuel should test 75 degrees and anything below 70 is poor, for the lighter spirits have escaped and the denser parts are not so quickly vaporized.

Flooding of the carburetor is often caused by a poorly seated needle valve. A leaky float will cause the same trouble. If the valve is to blame, this may be determined by looking at its seat. If the seat is rough it should be carefully ground in with oil and emery, by rotating the spindle in its seat. A bent valve spindle will also cause flooding. In this case, remove the float, place the spindle on a block of wood and carefully straighten the bent part with a few light taps, interposing a bit of wood. Occasionally a few small holes or possibly a tiny crack will admit enough fuel to sink the float. In this case the punctures must be soldered. Copper floats are thin and but a small quantity of solder can be used.

Should the motor balk suddenly when the ignition system is in good shape the feed pipe is choked. If fuel is found in the tank the gasoline filter between supply pipe and carburetor should be examined. If the trouble is

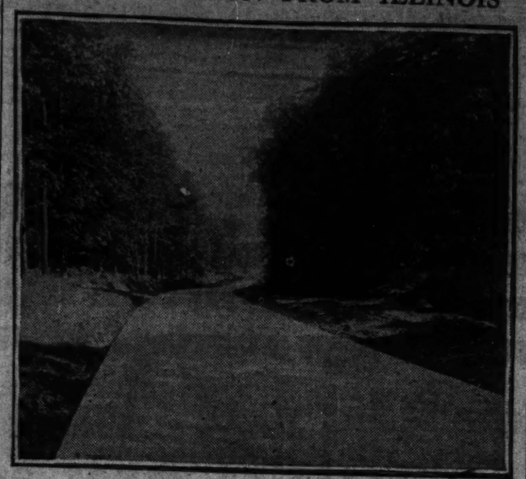
AN INVITATION FROM ILLINOIS



Three hundred miles, as the crow flies, the crack "Illinois boulevard" stretches away now in practically unbroken concrete from Chicago to St. Louis via Joliet, Bloomington, and Springfield. Here is the recently completed feature stretch which winds through Funk's grove, one of the few remaining virgin woodlands of the state. Try it while the autumn colors last.

DECLARES BALLOON TIRES ARE NONSKID AND ADD COMFORT

BY EUGENE SILVER.
[President Chicago Cole Co.]

Here are a few facts concerning the early history and development of Balloon "air cushion" tires.

They were originally used on airplanes to cushion the plane against racking of rough and uneven ground when taking off or landing.

A type of thin wall cushion tire was developed and used on electric cars to increase mileage per charge.

They have now been developed for motor cars and run in the larger sizes.

A 33x5 standard cord has a contact area between road and tire of 26.25 square inches. A 7.30 Balloon "air cushion" tire has a contact area between road and tire of 48.30, an increase of 84 per cent.

Balloon air cushion tires increase gasoline mileage, cushion the entire car against road shocks, and almost eliminate squeaks and rattles. They are nonskid and increase riding comfort 100 per cent, making it possible to negotiate ordinary rough roads at the same speeds that are possible on pavement.

High Brow Days of Closed Car Shows Now Gone Forever

"All our best efforts are behind this closed car show," J. R. Histed, vice president and general manager of the Hudson Motor Company of Illinois, said yesterday. "We have staked our future on the belief that the average motorist is looking for a durable, practical inclosed car at a moderate price.

"A few years ago inclosed car shows were more or less highbrow events, with their chief attractions a selection of ornate sedans and limousines which the average man never even hoped or wanted to buy and use.

"We did a good deal of talking about the stimulation of inclosed car sales in those days. We, the automobile trade, talked all around the subject, but we never got down to the real meat of the public's reason for holding away from inclosed cars. That reason was price. Your common sense motorist couldn't see why an inclosed car should cost nearly twice as much as an open one.

"Production of a reasonably priced closed car has made automobile manufacturing a steady twelve months' business instead of a spring rush and summer slump proposition. That has meant a great economy.

"Our frank belief is that 80 per cent of the men and women now driving open cars are dissatisfied, and that as soon as they learn that they can obtain the same advantage of volume prices in inclosed cars they will switch to the inclosed models. This promises to be one of the chief automobile markets of the next few years."

ANOTHER MOTOR.

Italians have invented a water cooled engine of the radial type that is operated by heavy fuel and weighs less than two pounds for each horsepower developed.

Concrete Ribbon Links Chicago with St. Louis

Illini Boulevard, 300 Miles Long, Opened to Traffic.

WITH the distinction of being the longest pavement of the kind in the world and also connecting two of the largest cities of the United States, the Illini boulevard was formally thrown open to traffic Oct. 4. Slightly less than 300 miles in length and connecting Chicago at the northeast with St. Louis at the southwest, the white band of concrete, eighteen feet in width, stretches as straight as an arrow for nearly the entire distance across the state of Illinois.

The only curves of consequence are located at Carlinville and Staunton in Macoupin county, where the conformation of the land forces a swing to the east for a few miles.

Costing approximately $9,000,000, the Illini boulevard promises to carry the heaviest vehicular traffic of any overland highway of the world, and the reduction in mileage between the two metropolitan cities and the urgent necessity for such a twelve months' medium of travel appear to more than justify the cost. The previous shortest highway between those points was about 400 miles.

The first link in the great boulevard was constructed six years ago between Springfield and St. Louis and was paid for by the state and counties traversed. The sections to the north of Springfield were paid for out of the state bond issue fund as far north as Joliet. Between the latter point and Chicago the road was constructed by the state and counties. There is a small gap of ten miles between Springfield and Williamsville which cannot be completed this year, due to some delay in procuring the right of way, but the highway will be thrown open to through traffic, regardless of this minor stretch in Sangamon county.

The Illini boulevard, due to its diagonal routing, cost more to build per mile than any other road of the state which followed the usual north and south and east and west section lines. The state highway department, to save mileage and expense in construction, abandoned the lines of the established dirt roads whenever they veered to the right or left and laid a new course, thus preserving the straight line between the metropolitan termini. To provide this even course it was necessary for each county to pay for right of way taken from farms. In some instances tracts were cut squarely in two, involving heavy expense, but the wisdom of the engineers in thus eliminating dangerous curves and at the same time keeping the mileage down to the minimum, will be justified in the greater safety to traffic and in lessening of accidents.

With the formal opening of the Illini boulevard motor cars can easily make the run between Chicago and St. Louis in a day of ten hours. Slower moving trucks for freight and express will require twelve to fourteen hours to negotiate the distance.

Hopes of various motor bus promoters to operate cars for gain between the two metropolitan centers appear doomed to disappointment. The policy of the Illinois commerce commission seems antagonistic to such lines and the opposition of the steam railroads to such competition will likely prove effective.

The Illini boulevard cuts through the heart of the Illinois corn belt. Except through famed Funks Grove, southwest of Bloomington, the boulevard makes no pretensions towards possessing scenic grandeur. Only the fertile fields of corn, growing on the level prairie land, meet the eye of the tourist for the major portion of the 300 mile run.

Funks Grove appears very much as it did when the first white settlers came to Illinois 100 years ago. It has escaped the ax and numbers scores of huge monarchs of the forest which were here when the Indians were the only inhabitants. The grove is a public game preserve and contains thousands of game birds and small animals, such as raccoons, squirrels, mink, weasel, fox, and wolves. Hunters are barred and the denizens rest secure in their haunts.

Serve the Traffic.

Minnesota trunk highways—commonly known as Babcock roads—run through every town of more than 2,500 population, except one, and within ten miles of the homes of more than nine-tenths of the people of the state.

Thomas H. MacDonald, chief of the government bureau of public roads at Washington, made the announcement this week after a federal survey covering 103,050 miles of public roads in Minnesota.

CABIN ON AUTO.

A specially built cabin, erected on a motor chassis, has been designed for the maharajah of Gwalior. The Indian ruler will use it for touring and big game hunting.

Big Changes in Auto Models Now Come in Summer

Tells Why Old 'Surprises' of Old Show Days Have Passed.

"MORE and more, American automobile manufacturers are adopting the policy of changing models in midsummer instead of midwinter," L. Markle, Rickenbacker distributor, said yesterday. "This tendency is apparent in the several recent announcements of radically changed models made by as many prominent manufacturers and others which we know are to follow.

"The old policy of making changes in the winter time has proven impractical. It merely means that the change announced in January was succeeded by another one in April or May, the latter hurriedly made to conform to some new wrinkle disclosed at the winter shows.

"Inasmuch as the "show season" lasts from Jan. 1 to April 1, such innovations as were decided upon during that period could not be announced until after April 1, even if they could be incorporated in the product in that time, which was seldom possible. As a matter of fact, in these days of volume production a change in models not only means a change in design of the car itself but in the entire factory equipment. To make such changes, therefore, requires at least six months.

"This has resulted in the condition we now see—namely: changes that were decided upon the first of the year could not be actually put into execution before July 1. Another reason for bringing out the new models in midsummer is that people have come to expect them at that time.

"Manufacturers used to try to spring something on each other at the shows, only to find when they "unveiled" the surprise that several others had done precisely the same thing.

"This change in policy of bringing out new models July 1 instead of Jan. 1 will not, in my opinion, lessen the value of the shows, but rather will enhance their interest. The shows are all simply a starting point for the sales campaign of the coming season. Dealers and buyers come there not so much to see novelties as to compare those things which have been proven in service and from that standpoint base their requirements.

"There are many other reasons which have to do with production that also have made necessary this change in policy on the part of manufacturers. We are all agreed that the logical time to make changes that may seem necessary is in the slack season that always just succeeds the tremendous spring demand. On the other hand, if we are to manufacture and store up stock to take care of that excessive spring demand, we must begin not later than Dec. 1 to do so. Obviously we cannot do this and still experiment with novelties or innovations.

"Any features that are to go into the car for the coming year must not only have been thoroughly tried and proven by that time but must be in heavy production. Conversely, no volume manufacture nowadays would dare go into heavy production on any new or untried feature.

"Then, too, just when retail selling is at its height factory production is slackening off, so that along about April 1 we are able to devote time to such improvements or refinements and factory changes as we think necessary and bring them out July 1, so as to give an extra impetus to the fall business."

Interest in the good roads movement throughout the country is increasing rather than diminishing. This is shown by results of a census on bond issues contemplated and authorized for highway construction just completed by the Asphalt Association of New York.

The figures show a total of $781,228,884 in bond issues, exclusive of federal aid, were reported under contemplation in the states, counties, townships, and road districts of the country from Aug. 1, 1922, to Aug. 1, 1923, and that the sum of $617,029,537 was actually authorized to be expended.

The amount reported as contemplated exceeded the $748,563,000 contemplated during the year previous by $32,675,384, and the sum authorized exceeded that of the year before by $75,304,757. The bond issues authorized from Aug. 1, 1921, to Aug. 1, 1922, amounted to $541,724,780.

Finds Greater Values Given in New Motor Cars

Public Benefited by the Growth of Auto Industry.

BY CHARLES D. HASTINGS.
[President Hupp Corporation.]

THE visitor to the closed car show this year will see the greatest automobile value for his money and the finest assortment of motor cars of all prices and descriptions—mechanically and in appearance, appointment and comfort—that he has ever witnessed. The industry has enjoyed a success that has steadily grown greater each year simply because of one thing—it gives its customers an unusual value for their money.

The tremendous growth of the demand for the closed car in the last two years has been without question the greatest single factor from a sales standpoint in the industry. This growth has made the closed car considerably more of a value than it has ever been before, regardless of body type.

Every manufacturer, no matter upon what type of inclosed bodies he concentrates his effort, has succeeded in bringing down their prices remarkably. Many high grade closed models cost less today than their corresponding open models of three years ago.

We have not yet reached the percentage of closed car sales that we may reasonably expect within the next two or three years. As the demand for this type continues to grow, further economies in manufacture will be possible and the public will benefit.

The visitor to the show will see better bodies on every type car—closed and open—than he saw a year ago. The chassis are better and more efficient. Methods have been perfected whereby it is possible to build better closed bodies without adding to their weight and in some instances even lessening it. Seating is better; there is greater comfort; driving ease has been improved.

Underneath the body is a better and more efficient chassis, with improved transmission, gears and gear controls, crankshaft, pistons, and cylinder block construction.

Quite recently a new metal, duralumin, has taken its place along with those other metals—chrome steel, nickel steel, and other high grade alloys—for which the automobile industry has been sponsor. Though few manufacturers have as yet adopted this metal in their cars, there is little question that it will soon be universally accepted as a vital unit in several places where needless weight is being carried today.

Value Received.

Automobiling in China has become popular, and thousands of natives take joy rides for pleasure. It is not uncommon for a poor coolie to spend his last cent on a motor ride that leaves him miles from home. He is later found walking back, satisfied in his own mind that his money has been well spent.

WORK-BENCH WISDOM

FEEDING OF YOUNG CARBURETORS.

BY ERWIN GREER.

A LITTLE water in the fuel will cause a lot of trouble. Water is heavier than gasoline and settles at the bottom, therefore when the fuel is low in the tank any water is likely to be drawn to the carburetor.

Stale gasoline is the cause of more trouble than most drivers realize. A good grade of fuel should test 75 degrees and anything below 70 is poor, for the lighter spirits have escaped and the denser parts are not so quickly vaporized.

Flooding of the carburetor is often caused by a poorly seated needle valve. A leaky float will cause the same trouble. If the valve is to blame, this may be determined by looking at its seat. If the seat is rough it should be carefully ground in with oil and emery, by rotating the spindle in its seat. A bent valve spindle will also cause flooding. In this case, remove the float, place the spindle on a block of wood and carefully straighten the bent part with a few light taps, interposing a bit of wood. Occasionally a few small holes or possibly a tiny crack will admit enough fuel to sink the float. In this case the punctures must be soldered. Copper floats are thin and but a small quantity of solder can be used.

Should the motor balk suddenly when the ignition system is in good shape the feed pipe is choked. If fuel is found in the tank the gasoline filter between supply pipe and carburetor should be examined. If the trouble is not found at this point examine the feed pipe. Open the drain cock of the carburetor and if the fuel does not come out in a steady stream the trouble is in the pipe. Unscrew the unions at each end of the pipe line and run a wire through.

The opening in the spray nozzle is small and a particle of grit is sufficient to clog it. Flooding the carburetor sometimes fails to dislodge the obstruction and a fine wire is needed to clean it out. Fine particles of grit often work through the filter and enter the float chamber. The motor becomes irregular, misfiring slowing down, and even coming to a stop as the throttle is opened wide. This is caused by the increased suction at higher speeds, which draws the obstruction into the nozzle. The particles may fall away as the suction decreases with the speed of the motor. Racing the motor may draw the obstruction through, but the best way is to clean out the float chamber.

The adjustment of the spray nozzle is very important and the driver should not alter its height arbitrarily. The correct height must be found by experimenting, if the manufacturer's adjustment has been disturbed.

The set screw or lock nut of the butterfly valve sometimes becomes loose. This trouble is easily found, inasmuch as the motor will fail to respond to the movement of the throttle on the quadrant.

The supply cock in the feed pipe at the tank end should be a snug fit in its seat, otherwise it may jar partly shut. A leak in the intake pipe will admit too much air to the cylinders and result in an impoverished mixture.

Auto Industry Built on Sound and Sane Basis

Has Added Vast Sums to Economic Wealth of Nation.

BY W. A. FARRINGTON.
[Maxwell-Chalmers Distributor.]

NEVER has the automotive industry as a whole been in a better position to invite searching scrutiny than today. And the more one studies the industry the more one will be impressed with the soundness and saneness with which the manufacturers are building.

In analyzing the automotive industry one must keep in mind its youth. To be sure, electrically driven motor cars date back to 1832, but the use of the gasoline engines in motor cars came considerably later. Ford's first car dates back to about 1893.

In 1895 the total automobile production of the country was but 300 cars. Ten years later the total production was but 25,000 cars. Today at Columbus circle, New York, twice that many automobiles pass every twenty-four hours. In 1910 there were less than 500,000 registered automobiles in the United States. Today there are more than 13,000,000.

How many people have any understanding of the contribution that the motor car has made to the country's economic wealth? Most people think steel is the most important manufactured product. But steel is fifth. Slaughtering and meat packing is first. Petroleum is second. And where would petroleum be without the motor car?

Before the days of the automobile the production of kerosene in growing quantity necessitated the output of more gasoline than could be absorbed. Gasoline was then troublesome to dispose of, and state inspection laws were passed to prevent the adulteration of kerosene with gasoline. Today there are nearly 30,000 producers of crude petroleum. The aggregate investment in production, transportation, refining, and distribution of petroleum and its products is $7,310,000,000. And think to what extent the motor car has been responsible for the growth of this gigantic industry.

Road building, a billion dollar industry, is the biggest construction industry in America today. To what extent has the automobile been responsible for this growth?

The automotive industry is the third largest rail shipper of manufactured products. Refined petroleum and its products are first. And petroleum would never be first were it not for the automobile.

A brief inventory of the automotive industry will help to obtain a better idea of its economic importance. Last year 2,659,064 cars were produced. The capital invested was $1,456,649,954. The cost of the materials bought was $1,289,614,326. The industry employs nearly 300,000 men and pays them nearly $400,000,000 annually in wages. The wholesale value of the output of automotive products during the year was $2,558,207,389. The accessory business alone last year represented an invested capital of $1,751,000,000.

Competition in the automotive industry is keen, and production men are devoting their energies to ways of eliminating waste so that the price to the consumer may be reduced. The industry has learned that honesty pays. The manufacturer who produces a car which lives up to all of the claims made for it is not only a good manufacturer but he is also a wise business man. That man, in acquiring good will, obtains a priceless possession. Gone are the days when anything with four wheels which will run can be sold.

In the years to come we will see fewer cars and fewer companies. The whole tendency in industry today is toward larger, dominant companies. The same is true of the automotive industry. But in building the industry will build soundly. That is evident already today.

Set an Example.

A letter to the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce from S. S. Leonard of Lima, Peru, tells of a reverend padre superior del Colegio de Santa Rosa, Chosica, Peru, who a short time ago collected funds and built a road from that town to an abandoned bridge, which holds up the automobile travel from Chosica and Lima. He is now trying to arouse enough interest in the bridge to secure finances for its completion.

UNDER THE PAINT

Under the highly finished panels and layer on layer of paint, the body of your closed car looks like this. It requires good, substantial coachwork and the experience of centuries of wood workers' art to turn out a closed body that will withstand the shocks and strains of driving. It is interesting to note the detail that goes into the closed body "foundation."

SEEK CAREFUL MAKER, IS TIP TO BUYER OF MODERN MOTOR CAR

BY H. A. STOTT.
[General Sales Mgr. Apperson Motor Car Co.]

THE word "engineering" has lost much of its potency through overuse. It merely means building in the right way out of the right kind of carefully and scientifically selected material. But building a motor car in the right way is of itself a life time study.

Unfortunately, a motor car built in the wrong way will run and for a time give good service, and this fact makes it very hard for the layman to know when a car is correctly designed and when it is just fairly well designed.

It has been my opinion for many years that the difference between perfect engineering and just fairly good engineering is not so much a matter of genius as of painstaking experimentation, road experience, and time.

All motor car engineers have access to approximately the same engineering text books. Technical schools will teach about the same engineering theory. Basing my statement on observation, I am inclined to believe that there isn't much difference in motor car engineering theory. But there is a vast difference in the patient and tireless sincerity and labor with which that engineering theory is applied. And it is this difference in the manner of applying the knowledge we all have about motor car design that makes the wide difference in the endurant quality and in the operation and satisfaction which the motorist gets out of various makes of motor cars.

A MOTOR CRIME.

The motorist who uses too rich a mixture is filling his crankcase with anti-lubricant, cheating himself on his gasoline bill, and wasting one of our fast disappearing natural resources.

All Bounties of Earth Combined in Modern Auto

Even Africa and South Sea Islands Do Their Share.

BY THOMAS J. HAY.
[Chandler Distributor.]

THE closed car show at the Coliseum brings to mind the wonderful difference a comparative few years has made in the comfort and convenience incorporated in the automobile. How strange one of the old-timers on which the top and windshield were "extras" would look in this show of luxurious closed models!

Few people, however, stop to consider how many parts of the world contribute to the making up of the modern automobile. The field, mine, air, and water are searched to provide the luxurious vehicle to give you transportation comfortably and safely, no matter what the weather.

Dismal forests of South America and Africa provide crude gum that you see only as a set of cord tires. The cords for these same tires are Sea Island cotton and gathered by boys that look like bronze statues.

Iron ore is transported in huge boats which come down from Lake Superior to one of the centers of the steel industry, where the red ore is turned into silver steel by being mixed with products of the quarry and then fluxed with seasoning of strange metals from distant countries.

The cattle from the great ranges of the world furnish the leather for the cushions while the horses from all parts of the world furnish the curled hair to make them soft.

The aluminum works driven by the giant power of Niagara supplies that light white metal. Copper mines contribute the wiring. The great tree felled in the forest somewhere will be wheels and body frames. Pigments and rare gums from all corners of the world combine the supply of colors and varnishing.

The elements of the air and water are to be harnessed for tire and radiator. Deep down in the ground is crude oil from which gasoline is made and delivered to you from the wayside filling station.

Mother Earth's bounties are indeed combined in the modern motor car.

Paid In Full.

The annual tax paid by motorists of the country for the operation of their automobiles exceeds the yearly tax of all railroads of the country by the amazing sum of more than $60,000,000. This does not include income taxes of the automotive manufacturer or the individual motorist.

Sometimes I think that I'll write an advertisement for Jordan that will run without change for ten years.

Here it is:—

Regardless of what any other company in this industry thinks or does, the Jordan Company is going to build a better automobile every year.

A Winning Array of Closed Cars for 1924

IT is no longer necessary to ponder over the question, "Shall we buy a four cylinder sedan or six cylinder open car?"

Cleveland closed models for 1924 offer a solution of that problem.

They are priced practically the same as similar models of the worthwhile fours. Yet they have these prime requisites of motoring satisfaction: Marvelous flow of six cylinder power, beauty and style, comfort for the full quota of passengers, and economical operation.

All Cleveland closed cars for 1924 are powered by the new Cleveland motor—the most efficient of its size ever placed in a motor car.

Once you have driven a Cleveland through traffic and over hard hills, your choice of a closed car will be made.

One Chicago Knight

YOU SAW IT from the curb; one of the atoms that make Chicago's traffic, but apart. Your eye singled it out at once and rested on it with peculiar pleasure as it swung lightly out of the stream of other cars and whispered to a stop before you.

A creation in gleaming blue and nickel. A closed car of beautifully blended lines and curves.

The forward door swung open and the most beautiful woman in the world asked you to come in. Inside, the door clicked smartly shut, and you sank comfortably in the deep-cushioned seat.

"I am going to take you home." You smiled and nodded. The character of the car and its driver foreshadowed the character of the destination.

Your hand touched the upholstery. It was of fine velour. Your eyes traveled over exquisite fittings of metal, the symmetrical instrument board, and past, to the shapely hood in front. You hardly heard the street noises through the heavy plate glass windows. There was just warmth and comfort.

She handled the car easily, lightly. It seemed no effort. And once, when danger threatened from one side, a brilliant spurt of speed followed a little pressure of her foot.

You said to yourself, "This is the poetry of motion."

You fell into a muse, that was finally broken by her voice: "Here we are, dear."

The voice was your wife's voice, and you sat before your house in your Willys-Knight Sedan.

Hundreds and hundreds of Chicago's representative people go about their work and play in the Willys-Knight. And they have chosen it with reason.

For here are beauty, distinction, comfort and economy all in one. Nothing on the streets of Chicago is like the grace and taste of the Willys-Knight. It stands alone.

This fine car is powered by the same type of engine as many of the finest, most expensive cars of Europe—Daimler of England, Panhard, Peugeot, Mors and Voisin of France, Mercedes of Germany, and Minerva of Belgium.

But in the Willys-Knight, American genius and large production methods have brought the sleeve-valve Knight engine to its highest perfection at a minimum of cost. That is why the thousands in America can have a car powered by the engine chosen by kings.

Willys-Knight owners tell us of 50,000 miles and more without having a tool touched to their engines. They tell us of 20 miles and more to the gallon of gasoline—of amazing mileages on oil—of how very far they go without adding water to the radiator—how wonderfully cool the engine runs.

But most of all, they tell us of the tingling pleasure of the Willys-Knight's smooth, noiseless, effortless travel, the marvelous ease with which it steers, and the grateful comfort they find in it.

Willys-Knight and Overland—the two outstanding motor car values—are sold and serviced in Chicago by a city-wide dealer organization. There is a Willys-Overland dealer very near you. Strike in Jersey Puts Motor Bus to Severe Test

Carry 2,000,000 People Daily to 150 Cities and Towns.

MOTOR coach transportation is getting a severe test in New Jersey. One hundred and fifty cities and towns, with a street car riding population of 2,000,000 people in the habit of being transported over 1,000 miles of rails by 2,250 cars, have been without the usual form of transportation for fifty-four days.

This meant a herculean task must be faced by the motor coach transportation systems, which three years ago started to creep into this district. When the Public Service Railway company strike started there were bus lines radiating from practically every important center in the territory they served, and the bus men looked on themselves as a permanent institution and the existing emergency as an opportunity to prove themselves.

Do Not Increase Fares.

Fares were not increased, but service rendered was multiplied to such good purpose that plants reported in a number of cases that their men were not only getting to work regularly, but that they were reporting with less tardiness than was ordinarily recorded under normal conditions. A trip through the shopping district convinced observers that business was going on much as usual.

The city of Camden had one of the most difficult transportation problems to be met. Many of Camden's workers live in Philadelphia, and a great portion of the residents of Camden work in Philadelphia. The ferries carry them back and forth across the Delaware river by the thousands.

Ordinarily there were about 170 motor coaches being operated in the city of Camden and to points just outside. With the beginning of the strike this number was increased to about 250. Where the coaches normally carried about 50,000 passengers per day, they are now carrying from 90,000 to 130,000. At the rush hours the ferries pull in at the dock and unload thousands of people, but awaiting them is a long line of motor coaches, and with remarkably little delay and no confusion these thousands board their coaches and are on their way home—sure of their being conveyed by this means to points as far distant as fifteen, twenty, and even thirty miles.

Offer 5 Cent Rides.

The Camden street car lines sell four tickets for 30 cents, making a fare of 7½ cents. The busses sell strip tickets, eight for 50 cents, making a fare of 6¼ cents. When the street car employés struck, asking for a 30 per cent increase in pay the company advised that they would operate at a loss and could not, therefore, meet their demands.

The bus men, on the other hand, announced that, if given assurance that they will be permitted to operate over a reasonable length of time, they would put on enough coaches to give adequate service and reduce fares to 5 cents.

The greatest criticism of the coaches during the strike has been the crowding and overloading of busses, but this criticism is really unjust because the business was nearly tripled without notice, and the real wonder is that this 3 year old infant industry didn't break under the strain instead of growing and gaining strength.

The coach manufacturers were alert to the opportunity. The Mack company rushed in cars with only a priming coat of paint. The Garford Motor Truck company sent new coaches, and operated a service station just a few blocks from the Pennsylvania plaza, the principal bus terminal, where they could give rush service. The busses, having to do double duty, running almost continually, had to get their service on the run—and they got it.

Proves Need of Coaches.

The story of the New Jersey strike is proving that motor coaches are to fill a constantly growing place in our transportation system. The definite limits of that place have not as yet been clearly fixed, but they are sure to be broad ones.

Some of the successful bus lines operate on rather long runs, such as from Philadelphia to Atlantic City. Others operate successfully on short runs within the city limits in direct competition with street cars. The flexibility of bus transportation is one of its greatest values.

Suburban districts spring up like mushrooms—just beyond the limits of the regular street railway transportation. Extending the lines to service these districts is a slow and costly process, and often these extensions do not pay for years. A motor coach extension can be made with a comparatively small investment, as there are no rails or trolley wires. Usually they pay from the start.

Page Diogenes.

Because he had parked his car too long in a restricted zone, Judge E. W. Carroll of Watertown, N. Y., fined himself $1. Judge Carroll confessed judgment before himself of violating a city traffic ordinance and then read himself a lecture on law obedience.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

Authorities place the burden of guilt for Chicago's mounting list of automobile casualties among children upon the motorists and the parents. These two, they declare, are morally responsible for the safety of the city's kids. The children themselves are not guilty, but they pay the price of adult carelessness. Above is an example of driver's responsibility, despite the heedless actions of the two boys.

Balloon Tires Held Insurance Against Skidding

THE use of large section low inflated tires, known as "balloon" or "doughnut" tires, assures better control of motor cars so equipped and promotes safe driving, Jack Quinlan, Chicago distributor of Moon cars, said yesterday.

"Balloon tires, being very large in diameter and operating with low air pressure, have a much larger road surface or road contact than ordinary tires; consequently in slowing up or stopping they have a better grip on the road, resulting in greater responsiveness and more efficient brake action.

"Skidding is practically eliminated by the use of these tires. Efficient brakes when properly applied help prevent skidding, but if applied suddenly, tend to cause skidding, especially in turning.

"Tires come into direct contact with the road and therefore must be considered as carefully as brakes, for although brakes may operate efficiently and stop the turning of the wheels of the car, momentum will carry the car forward or cause it to skid to either one side or the other if the tire resistance is insufficient.

"Therefore, the latest development in pneumatic tires, the large, low-inflated balloon tires assure better traction and greater road resistance under all conditions and are important factors of safety."

No Public "Call Down."

Automobile horns are not to be used in "calling husbands down," is the latest order of Phoenix traffic officers, especially directed at wives who come for their hubbies at the office buildings. The honking is confused with the police signals.

PRICE MOVEMENTS SHOW STABILIZING OF AUTO INDUSTRY

BY R. C. CRIST.
[Gardner Distributor.]

Not since 1915, when motor car prices were recklessly slashed because of economic conditions, have manufacturers been able to establish a delivery price that has remained in force for any length of time or has actually represented the real value that was built into their cars.

Radical fluctuations in the price of material, unsettled labor conditions, and large inventories purchased at the peak of prices have contributed to such a condition and have forced many manufacturers, who have been set on a definite schedule or who have of a necessity had to create a larger volume of business, to make further price cuts when such were in no sense warranted.

Thus the public has on many occasions been given the impression that a downward trend of prices could be expected, and the more conservative manufacturers who were far more concerned about keeping up the standard of value which characterized their product were several times forced to revise their prices for the psychological effect, even though such revisions were not justified.

As a consequence a very unnatural method of establishing retail prices has existed, since such prices have not been based on the actual value of the car but on a price established by unusual competitive conditions. Such an unnatural condition has had a harmful effect upon the industry.

However, in the many recent announcements of 1924 models there is evidence of stabilization. A number of manufacturers have increased their prices, others have made slight reductions, while others are standing pat. These are definite indications that the industry is getting back on a sound business basis, and for the first time in several years manufacturers are establishing a retail price that is in proportion to the value of their own individual cars.

Combine Science with Art in Auto Body Designing

Severe Tests Used to Avoid Weakness in Construction.

BY HARRY HOLLINGSHEAD.
[President Chicago Nash Co.]

One of the most difficult and important problems facing the motor car manufacturer is the design of his inclosed bodies. It calls into play both the technique of the artist and the science of the engineer.

The proportions of the body must be harmonized with the proportions of the chassis. Beauty must be gained, but at no loss of roominess. Strength must be attained and yet weight and bulk must be held to a safe minimum.

A low swung appearance is desirable, nevertheless the height of the body must afford easy entrance and exit for the passengers and provide them with the maximum comfort when seated. The driver's seat, in particular, demands especial thoughtfulness. And a thousand and one other phases must be calculated with infinite care so that the body will resist the strains and stresses thrown upon it by travel.

Before a body is built a complete body of full proportions is drafted. Then this drawing is gone over with minute care, down to the final details. Then a sample body is built and mounted upon a chassis.

This body is given every possible test that arises in actual owner operation of a motor car. After this test the body is gone over carefully again. This feature is strengthened; that feature changed; a brace put here; a heavier pillar there; and so on until the design is considered right.

In this preliminary work all calculations are based upon the assumption that the body must prove superior to the conditions of the most difficult roads. Thus for normal driving every factor of safety is far beyond what is necessary.

It is obvious that a perfect design can be ruined through the use of mediocre material. Only wood, metal, glass and fabric of a quality that has passed expert tests can be used.

Careless workmanship is avoided by the use of the most modern machines, the employment of high grade workmen, and by continuous production inspection made with forms and jigs that instantly reveal the smallest fault or error.

13,002,427 Motor Vehicles Registered in U. S.; Big Increase

The remarkable increase in number of motor vehicles registered in the United States has continued in the first six months of 1923 without any sign of falling off in the rate, according to the bureau of public roads of the United States department of agriculture. On July 1 the total registration of motor cars and trucks amounted to 13,002,427, an increase of 764,052 since Jan. 1. In these figures allowance has been made for reregistration and nonresident registrations as far as possible.

The rate of increase is the same as that which has prevailed since 1916, during which time registrations have increased from 3,512,996 to 13,002,427.

Trucks and commercial cars now number 1,371,053, an increase of 92,254 since Jan. 1, and the rate of increase is greater than that for the total registration of all vehicles.

The table issued by the bureau shows registrations as follows: Private passenger cars, 11,571,181; taxicabs, busses and cars for hire, 60,185; trailers, 84,111, and motorcycles, 141,521. The numbers of the last two classes of vehicles are not included in the registration total.

The total registration revenue reported is $167,340,937, of which $134,733,225 is applicable to road work by or under the supervision of state highway departments. In twenty-seven states gasoline taxes were collected, amounting to $8,669,174, of which $4,977,564 is applicable to road work by or under the supervision of state highway departments. Revenue from this source will be materially increased in the latter half of the year when the gasoline tax laws of several additional states go into effect.

Big Sign Order.

More than twenty-seven tons of steel were used in the manufacture of Detroit's "Boulevard Stop" signs, installation of which has been completed by the Detroit Automobile club.

STOP THE SQUEAK.

To prevent hood squeaks, the joint formed by the hood and the body cowl of your car should be lubricated from time to time with grease. A strip of rubber from an old inner tube fastened to the cowl of a Ford car will put an end to squeaks and rattles from that source. The less noise we have the greater pleasure we will derive.—Automobile Digest.

Wherein the Ladies Get Credit for Most Closed Car Success

Personality in the enclosed car of today is rapidly developing into the most important sales factor, according to Roy Iverson, Dorris and Anderson distributor.

"I do not mean the kind of personality which can be added to or taken from the car, but the real quality which the painstaking, honest and thoughtful manufacturer builds into his product," he declared.

"The streets of Chicago and other cities clearly substantiates my point, for one will see in ever increasing quantities the quality enclosed personality being driven down the boulevards by the woman owner to whom goes the credit of having first demanded the enclosed car.

"Mechanical refinement, ease of operation and control, velvety spring action, personality of body design and well equipped, harmoniously installed interior of high quality material has all been developed to fulfill the high standards of women's requirements. It is a conceded fact that milady is the axis about which 85 per cent of all sales revolve, and 100 per cent on the enclosed cars."

Motors Foe of Rail and Horse? Figures Say No

Steam Roads and Dobbin Hold Own Despite 13,000,000 Autos.

BY H. P. CARTER.

[Chicago District Manager Buick Motor Co.]

IT is said that at the Philadelphia centennial exposition in 1876, grave fears were expressed concerning the financial future of all gas companies because they were to be crippled, or put out of business entirely by the new lighting system, first publicly exploited at that time.

This now seems impossible to appreciate, because all up to date gas companies are in a most flourishing condition, and the new uses to which gas is being put have more than overcome the business lost to electrical competition. This reference to electrical development is made because of its similarity to the growth of the motor car business.

The automobile started as a luxury or experiment but rapidly became a necessity, until now there are about 13,000,000 passenger and freight motors in use in the country.

The almost natural thought was that the poor horse would soon be a thing to be seen only in museums or circuses, and that the railways of the country would gradually dry up for the want of business. It would be foolish to assert that the motor car has not taken away business formerly done by the horse and the railways. It surely has done this, but it has also created new business by the enlargement of facilities and the elimination of space.

Railways in 1900 had 37,600 locomotives and 1,365,000 freight cars. In April, 1923, they had 64,695 locomotives and 2,319,000 freight cars. More than 1,000,000 more cars than in 1900 and all of much greater capacity. Never in all history have the railways moved as many carloads of freight as in recent months.

How has the motor car in any general way injured the railways? There has been a curtailment of navigation facilities, especially on the great lakes, but this has been due to restrictive legislation and not to motor competition. Towns and cities on the great lakes have never prepared themselves to reap the benefit of lake service. There are, for example, almost no free municipal docks in the state of Michigan. There are only about one hundred lake ports.

The horse has also managed to hold his own through all this new competition, for the government figures show that on Jan. 1, 1923, there were 18,863,000 horses, with a value of $1,300,000,000 in the country. This was 600,000 more than in 1900, and the valuation per horse has been nearly doubled.

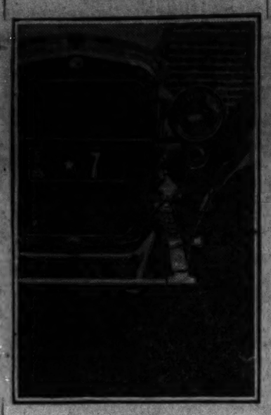
If the railways are taxed to their capacity, the car and locomotive shops filled with orders, and the horse, collectively, is as busy as ever, what can we say of the 13,000,000 odd motor cars and trucks which are chugging along in city streets and through country by-paths?

If they are all busy and yet have not taken business from the railways or the horse, they certainly must have created new business or have come into existence just as the world was reaching a new era of prosperity which would have fallen flat if the motor had not happend.

I believe the first commercial automobile was sold to Robert Allison of Port Carbon, Pa., in 1898. Could he possibly have dreamed that in the first three months of 1923 sales would reach nearly $50,000 machines? It hardly seems that any human mind could have foreseen it. And now that the motor is here to stay, what is to be its relation to the other methods of transportation—what place is it to fill most efficiently?

The field for the motor is yet in its infancy. There are experiments constantly being made with trucks and motor cars to see just where new business can be profitably created, and those of value will be enlarged upon for commercial use.

THE MILLION MARK



They have run out of numbers for auto licenses in California, now that the 1,000,000 point has been passed, and so they resort to symbols. The star on this shiny, new job stands for the million. Thus the license number is 1,000,007.

First Stock Sedan, Built 10 Years Ago, Is Still a Good Car

Oct. 29, 1923, stands out as a mile post in the automotive industry, for it marks the tenth anniversary of the first stock sedan ever made in this country. This car was shipped by the Franklin Automobile company to its Dallas, (Tex.) dealer and sold to G. A. Robertson of Dallas, who continued to operate it until June 3 of last year, when it was sold to S. A. Leake, an attorney.

The fact that the first stock sedan is now in its eleventh year of service and still running smoothly speaks volumes for the lasting qualities of the sedan type.

The public had to be educated to the advantages of a light, flexible, all year round car suitable for town or country use, on rough roads or smooth, and in the beginning it was a slow process. The popularity of the type, however, has increased rapidly, and today it represents a very large percentage of the industry's production.

KIND NEW PROCESS.

A process in which two gases are used has been developed for vulcanizing raw rubber in about half an hour at a temperature that permits the introduction of colorings.

Calls Closed Car Big Achievement of Auto Building

Pioneer Tells of Long Road That Has Led to Comfort.

BY HENRY PAULMAN.

[President Chicago Automobile Trade Assn.]

AS I turn back over the pages of automobile history and note the many laudable achievements of that great industry, a particular chapter serves as one of the most delightful memories of all.

The birth of the first automobile, fifty years before the first railroad track was constructed, was the response of the subconscious but very general demand of humanity for improvement in the means of transportation. The main objection was that they were imperfect mechanically, noisy and uncertain in operation, slow, uncomfortable and dangerous. The mass of research work done by the inventors in the years that followed was devoted entirely to the perfection of these deficiencies until the matchless motors of today supplanted those which were not practical.

When the first of the more modern machines was built it was only a conveyance without any protection from the elements, so dominant was the thought of constructing an ideal power plant. Demonstrations were made in these frail automobiles during the winter, and I personally recall the hardships we all underwent in the midst of blinding snowstorms with no shelter whatsoever.

Several years later manufacturers added the cape top, which at least was a cover from the burning rays of the sun and safety from the rain. Then the side curtains afforded more comfort.

And now comes the inclosed car, the practical all utility car, the crowning achievement in the romance of the automobile industry. Its instantaneous success was so great that today 60 per cent of the cars manufactured are closed car products. And this popularity is duly justified. The refinements and appointments of the closed car not only contribute to comfort but to health as well.

Yesterday winter festivities were conjectural — today, the bal masque, the opera, the reception are welcomed with spontaneity, and milady's sheer evening gown, dress slippers and coiffure are well protected as she travels fleetly, snugly settled back in such cozy atmosphere, the object of admiration in her "glass cage."

Tonight, beneath the glow of lights, join the promenade at the inclosed automobile show and view the new, masterful designs in the dozens of distinctive models. There you will find the car of your heart's desire with superior mechanical adaptations and clothed in the triumphs of coachwork—go and sit at the wheel of it.

Several years later manufacturers added the cape top, which at least was a cover from the burning rays of the sun and safety from the rain. Then the side curtains afforded more comfort.

And now comes the inclosed car, the practical all utility car, the crowning achievement in the romance of the automobile industry. Its instantaneous success was so great that today 60 per cent of the cars manufactured are closed car products. And this popularity is duly justified. The refinements and appointments of the closed car not only contribute to comfort but to health as well.

Yesterday winter festivities were conjectural — today, the bal masque, the opera, the reception are welcomed with spontaneity, and milady's sheer evening gown, dress slippers and coiffure are well protected as she travels fleetly, snugly settled back in such cozy atmosphere, the object of admiration in her "glass cage."

Tonight, beneath the glow of lights, join the promenade at the inclosed automobile show and view the new, masterful designs in the dozens of distinctive models. There you will find the car of your heart's desire with superior mechanical adaptations and clothed in the triumphs of coachwork —go and sit at the wheel of it.

No monarch ever rode in more comfort.

The Tribune will pay $5 each for questions accepted for the Inquiring Reporter to ask.—Send name and address with your question to "The Inquiring Reporter, Chicago Tribune." For today's question N. W. Gregg, 4041 Sheridan road, Chicago, was awarded $5.

The Question.

Why do you prefer the closed type car? [Asked of closed car owners.]

Where Asked.

Along Michigan avenue between Ohio street and the bridge.

The Answers.

Robert A. Leitz, Admiral hotel, president Railroad Insurance company — I have had open cars, but I find the closed car gives me and my family much more comfort, summer and winter. And it's a cleaner proposition. I am going to Oklahoma City next month, and you can imagine what kind of a trip that would be with an open car.

William A. Shannon, Glen View, Ill., salesman—I have just returned from a trip to Iowa. If I'd had an open car I would have been up against it in some bad weather I encountered. Many people think that a sedan is warm in the summer, whereas with the windows open there is just as much air, plus more comfort. When traveling it's some satisfaction to know that you can sleep in a closed car if unable to make a town.

Mrs. G. R. Knickerbocker, Wilmette, Ill., housewife—I don't know why, but I certainly like this old closed car of ours—probably because we have nine months of wet, chilly, cold weather. We got rid of our open car years ago—we haven't enough good weather for an open car. And, O, it's so much cleaner. In the summer, with our good roads, you want to be out of doors and traveling.

Frank H. Sullivan, 2707 North Mozart street, harbor inspector — Well, the first reason is that in case of bad weather it takes but a second to close the windows. Another thing, you can use a closed car all the year around. The women folks prefer the closed car. It's a cleaner car, especially when you are traveling over country roads.

Steve Brodie, 226 West Ontario street, advertising — It's an all year, all weather car, that's why. If a shower comes up turning the crank closes the windows and you have a stormproof compartment. It is cleaner, and not necessarily more expensive. It is better for the baby. Our baby plays around back there just as if she were at home.

Big Production of Closed Cars Is Cutting Price

Many Families Buy Two Machines, So All Can Ride.

BY W. C. FAUNCE.
[Oldsmobile Distributer.]

QUALITY plus "a price" is, I believe, the one demand of the American public in the buying of their automobiles today. The time has passed when the rich alone can afford closed cars, but the era has arrived when the average closed car buyer demands an attractively upholstered and fine looking car, plus quality.

During the last year automobile makers have probably learned more about the manufacture and sale of cars than during any other single year in the history of the industry. One of the greatest factors brought out by sales was that price is the paramount factor to be considered.

The American people want closed cars, but they cannot see a great price differential between the closed and open jobs. It is not generally realized that it takes at least thirty days to make a single closed body and complete it, from start to finish. This great length of time is what increases the cost. Due to large production, and the latest known methods of manufacture, the Olds Motor works, along with several other manufacturers, have discovered how to make these bodies at a fair price, and the response has been immediate.

We have found that many people are now buying two cars. Usually the man of the family buys the open car for himself and the wife gets a closed model. This has been true this year more than ever before because the women are learning to handle the automobile as well as the men, and they cannot see any reason why the family should be left stranded during the day while the wage earner has the car at his place of business.

We have also discovered that the closed car is always driven the longest, and the "trade-ins" made by our sales forces show that the open car is resold much more frequently than the closed. This is believed to be due to the fact that closed cars retain their attractiveness much longer than the open cars, if they are given good care.

Serves Them All.

Between 200 and 400 tourists register daily at the Keystone Automobile club of Philadelphia, Pa., and make inquiries regarding roads, garages, hotels, theaters, prize fights and shelter for dogs. The club also makes reservations for tourists at hotels, theaters and prize fights, and selects ideal camp sites for tourists carrying camping outfits.

CHECK YOUR CAR.

The Panama Pacific Steamship line has invited passengers booking sea voyages between New York and San Francisco to "check your car with your trunk." The same invitation holds good in the opposite direction also.

BALLOON "AIR CUSHION" TIRES

Fancy yourself sofa'd on billowy cushions instead of on your present tires so solidly inflated with air they set up stone-wall resistance to the slightest bump!

Realize how you pound away personal energy and car vitality every time you drive on those tightly compressed air tires of yours over hard pavements and bad roads that the best spring suspension cannot soften!

Then resolve to correct this riding neuralgia, this thumping and racking and weaving by riding in an Air-Cushion-Tire equipped Cole!

Ignore ruts and holes and all kinds of obstructions and float across them with the care free abandon of an aviator tracing broad, open, free highways of soft air.

And best of all, when you do strike pavement, feel perfectly safe and confident under all weather conditions that your enlarged braking surface and double brake power will stop you smoothly and on time.

Worry less about steering in and out of obstructions in the knowledge that a tough Air-Cushion Tire with less air is ready to absorb, not resist, the noisome shocks and pokes and jams.

And do all of this cheaper, save your car and assure your peace of mind.

Resolve today—right now, in fact, to float not bump.

Here's what cushion tires actually do:

1. They result in a final degree of all-around riding comfort never thought possible before.
2. They beautify and complete any car's original design.
3. They double braking power by increasing braking surface.
4. They are the simplest and most practical safeguards ever devised against skidding.
5. They minimize leaks and blowouts by requiring only 25 pounds inflation, front and rear.
6. They lower upkeep and postpone general car depreciation by cushioning vibration and all manner of ruinous road shocks.

Here Are Things to Look For on Autos in Exhibit

Easy to Read Class in the Closed Models, Expert Says.

BY DAYTON KEITH.
[Wills-Sainte Claire Distributor.]

CHICAGO motorists are being granted the opportunity this week of viewing, under one roof, virtually all the closed car offerings of the leading manufacturers.

To those who care to take the time and pains to make use of this opportunity, the Closed Car show may become a liberal education in motoring design and workmanship. More and more, as the automobile owning public increases its knowledge of cars and equipment, does the show become useful as a convenient place for the study of details.

One of the first points of scrutiny by any experienced showgoer is the fender thickness. Here is a detail which goes far toward proving the claims of any car to the possession of class. Thick, substantial fenders hold their finish better, resist more stoutly when bumped in thick traffic, and are better protection against accidents of all kinds.

Another interesting detail is the lowly floor board and its fastenings, if any. Cars of modern design now feature spring clamps which hold these floor boards stanchly in place, effectively hushing any tendency to vibrate or rattle.

Similar attention is shown in any fine car to the hushing of other sources of noise or annoyance. One builder has even designed a neat and effective spring clip for the brake rods which offers no impediment to their free operation, but effectively stops all sidewise motion—a common cause of noise in cars that have been in use for over a month.

The lenses and the design of the lamps are well worth study. Fine cars avoid glaring effects, not only by specially molded lenses, but also by methods of tilting the light beams downwards, when meeting cars traveling in an opposite direction. This tilting effect, manipulated from the dash, by magnetic means, greatly reduces danger from glare and is an example of the growing use of courtesy in which motoring was so long lacking.

Some of the latest fine car models embody as a detail a backing light which, when the car is running forward, uses no current whatever. Just as soon as the gears are put in reverse, this backing light goes into action, sending a bright beam to the rear and clearly showing everything in the anticipated rearward path of the car.

Locks are increasingly a detail of necessary equipment in cars of better grade. Ignition, transmission, spare wheel and lockers for storage are of little use without their protection. A forward step in convenience has been the equipment of locks which, for the entire car, are identical. With such equipment, the owner of the car avoids the need of carrying a whole bunch of keys by being able to turn any lock on his car by his single key.

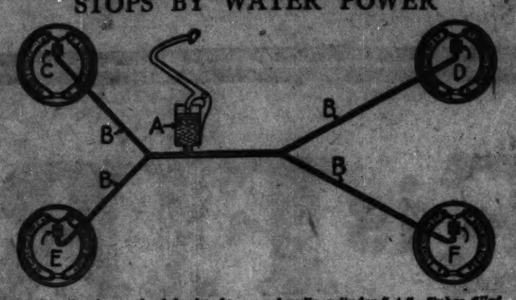
A detail worth the study of any showgoer is the mounting of the spare wheel. This equipment is of some weight, and is subject to a continuous series of strains, demanding the firmest and best braced types of support. Every exhibitor should welcome rough treatment of his spare wheel support during the show. People like to test its "feel." By their test they justly estimate the engineering contained in the rest of the car.

The same condition holds true regarding such standards as the tail light bracket. This piece is also continually being shaken and whipped by a car in motion. The prospective buyer wants to know if it is strong enough to stand the strain, for the tail light is a mighty important factor in safe transportation and should be substantial enough to support the weight of a man.

Much of a motor car is, by the necessity of design, covered from view, and susceptible of being judged only by performance. Certain details, like those I have enumerated, are in plain sight.

A car with visible details that are sturdy, graceful and painstaking is pretty sure to be designed and built with similar conscientious care and foresight in the parts that are hidden. One needs only the seeing eye and native common sense to pass judgment that is almost unerring and to thus qualify as a real expert on ranking motor cars in the actual order of their inner—and outer—excellence.

STOPS BY WATER POWER



With the four wheel brake Sebats striking sparks everywhere among automotive engineers, it is interesting to note the simplicity of the first four wheel braking system employed on any American made automobile. Above is a diagramatic view of the hydraulic system used for the last three years on the Duesenberg cars built in Indianapolis.

The foot brake operates directly on the piston of the master hydraulic cylinder "A." Tubes filled with hydraulic liquid, marked "B," connect with four brake cylinders, "C," "D," "E," and "F." Pressure of the foot pedal operates the master piston, forcing pressure to the piston in each of the brake cylinders, pushing the brake shoes against the inside of the drums and stopping the car. Since hydraulic pressure is always equal, the brakes are automatically equalized.

Columbia Highway Is Now 340 Miles Long

Solomon Had 1,400 Chariots, but None Like Those Today

New Craft Is Trained to Build the Modern Closed Car.

BY L. B. SUTHERLAND.
[Cadillac Distributor.]

THE luxurious closed car of today is a direct descendant of the ancient chariot, whose origin is lost in the mists of antiquity. In 1000 B. C. King Solomon owned no less than 1,400 chariots. And all through the old testament, the Iliad, and other ancient writings one hears the rumblings of the chariot's ponderous wheels.

Perhaps the first great stimulus given to the building of carriages more comfortable than chariots was the construction of the Appian way. Almost immediately after this Roman road building effort wheeled vehicles were adopted for purposes of show and state, for sport and private use.

So general became the use of carriages that it became necessary to restrict the use of wheeled vehicles to persons of high rank—and it is quite possible that the first traffic policeman bore the arms of a Roman soldier.

After Rome several centuries passed before real progress was made in carriage building. The first real improvement was made when the bodies, instead of being mounted directly on the axles, were suspended by straps fastened to four upright posts, one at each corner of the "chassis" frame.

Covered carriages made their appearance at the beginning of the fifteenth century, but these, too, were suspended on straps, and they tossed the occupants about in a rough and sickening manner. Not until 1670 were carriage bodies mounted on steel springs.

During the reign of Louis XIV, glass windows and complete doors for carriages were developed. During the eighteenth century there was a marked development in carriage building, particularly in the matter of elaborate vehicles for state use, many of which showed a distinct Louis XIV. influence.

Under the stimulus of prizes offered by the Society of Arts the early nineteenth century showed many advances in carriage construction. In 1804 Obadiah Elliott patented his method of suspending carriages on elliptical springs, and from that time on all vehicles have been hung on these or similar springs of steel.

Great stimulus was given the carriage building art by the invention of the internal combustion engine by Gottlieb Daimler in 1885, and its application two years later by M. Levassor to the propulsion of a carriage.

When the forerunner of the present Cadillac factory was built in Detroit in 1895 many of these traditions were fresh in the minds of the builders. With only a partial understanding of the problems born of increased speed and the stresses of a self-contained mechanism, these early body designers and builders were confronted with tasks of a magnitude second only to those of the engineers. Their business was to change coach building from a tradition to an art, and to apply to it not only the principles of beauty and comfort, but those of science as well.

For more than twenty years now Cadillac has been developing a new craft in its body shop, training men, inventing better machinery, adopting better materials to its uses, making better designs, searching out better conveniences. Today its bodies are designed and built with a care and an accuracy in no way second to the precision exercised in building the mechanism itself.

Radiator Bath.

Cleaning the cooling system is not a difficult job. Take two pounds of washing soda [not baking soda] and dissolve it in hot water. This may as well be taken from the radiator after a run. Pour into the radiator, being careful to remove all foreign matter by straining through cheesecloth. Run the car as usual all day and allow the solution to remain twenty-four hours. Drain the next morning and fill with fresh water

HOW THEY FIRE.

A simple way to find the firing order of the engine is to open the priming cups or remove the spark plugs and paste a piece of paper over each opening. Then crank your motor. By noting the rotation in which the papers are blown off you will get the firing order of the engine.

Cut in Cost and Improvements Put Closed Car Ahead

Modern Machines Airy and Stand Up on Rough Roads.

BY H. M. ALLISON.
[Columbia Distributor.]

IT is becoming quite the thing today to issue statements that in the near future open cars will be practically obsolete.

While I do not agree with the extreme enthusiasm that has prompted some men to condemn the open car to complete extinction, or even to anything closely approaching such a fate, I believe that the closed models will become the standard and the overwhelming favorite for as long as motor cars are built.

What, then, will be the fate of the open car?

It will meet with some demand, in the first place, from the "price buyer." It may be that eventually the quantity demand for closed models will enable manufacturers to offer them for less than cars with open bodies, but that day is as yet some distance away.

A certain number of people will prefer them on the basis of a desire for fresh air, although these folks could get just about as much ozone in a closed car if they wanted to. The open car will always be a more practical car for certain farm uses, where very often the family automobile must haul bulky packages to and from town.

We are, on the other hand, going to see a great development in closed body construction as builders find this type of automobile more and more worthy of their preferred attention. It is now possible to buy a closed car that costs less than the open models of the same makes did not long ago, and that is just as truly a "touring car" as those old timers were. We have learned how to increase strength while at the same time reducing weight, and how to turn out an enclosed body that stands the banging and straining of rough roads.

The modern closed car is made so that it can be opened wide to summer breezes—becoming to all intents and purposes a phaeton or roadster, yet the owner can instantly shut out showers of dust. Motorists are also beginning to realize that the construction of the top in a well made sedan or coupé helps to keep the passengers cooler in hot weather than does the average open car.

Columbia closed car sales ran almost even with open models all through the summer months of this year, which, to me, certainly indicates that the sedan and coupé are arriving as summer cars. In cold weather closed models will naturally have the call, so that they are now well established as year round automobiles.

Courtesy Hint.

Many drivers are criticized for cutting in too closely upon passing other cars, yet when the facts are known a large percentage of such violations are unintentional. The driver does not realize how near the rear of his car comes to the left front fender of the car he passes because his calculations are upset either through the speeding up of the car he passes or the slowing up of his car. The safe plan, therefore, is to speed up a little before taking your place in line.

A LITTLE REASON.

Should the engine hesitate or not run steady, the cause may be frequently traced to the small vent hole in the gasoline tank filler cap. If this hole becomes clogged with dirt the gasoline will not feed properly to the vacuum tank. Occasionally run a fine wire through this vent.

Makes Brake on Front Wheel an Independent Unit

Simplicity in the Control Linkage Is Also Obtained.

BY C. E. GAMBILL.
[Marmon Distributor.]

MUCH is being written these days on the subject of front wheel brake design. The public has been confused by some of the complicated designs of hydraulic and mechanical four wheel brakes that have been brought out. Some of the leading engineers have made sharp criticisms of several four wheel brake designs.

The Nordyke & Marmon company of Indianapolis, manufacturers of Marmon automobiles, made extensive tests of front wheel brakes before its design finally was offered to the public. The new brakes represent one of the very few front wheel braking systems that have been designed for front wheel use independently and separately from rear wheel brakes.

The company has made the four wheel brake equipment optional with the purchaser, believing the driver of a car should determine by his driving habits whether he should have two or four wheel brakes.

In building the four wheel braking system, the engineers left the standard rear wheel brakes untouched and built a front wheel system that would work in harmony with the already tried and proved rear wheel safety device. The front wheel brakes are of the internal expanding type and are so constructed that they cannot grab.

What's Beneath Paint Counts in Closed Car Body

Makers Strive to Make It Last as Long as Chassis.

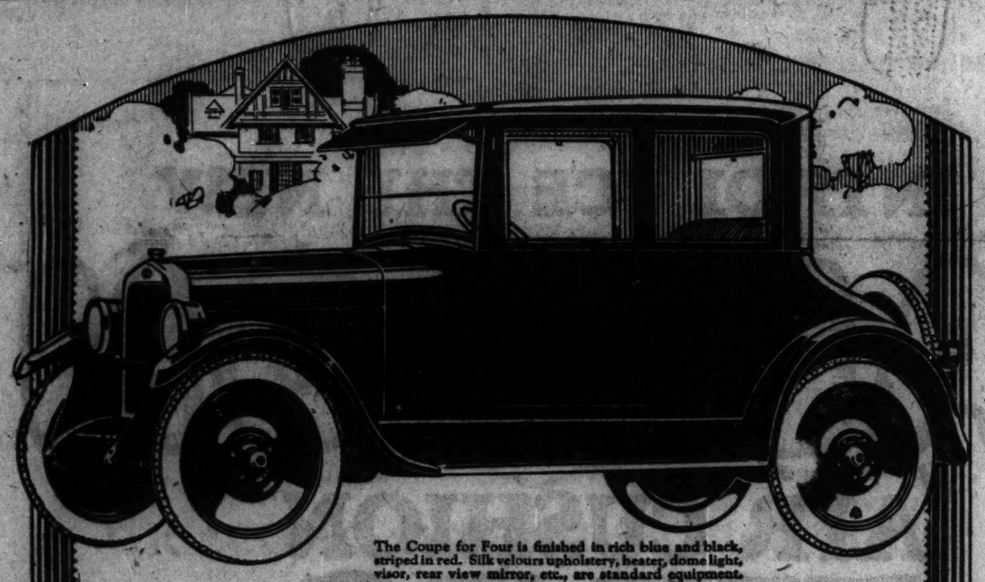
BY HENRY LEVY.
[Studebaker Distributor.]

IMPROVED methods in design and construction of closed cars have been an outstanding development in the automobile industry, and today better bodies are being built at lower costs than ever before. This, undoubtedly, is largely responsible for the increased appreciation by the public of the all-year utility of the closed car.

There was a time not so long ago when the enclosed car was considered a luxury to be enjoyed only by the limited few. Today, by contrast, the increased demand for closed cars has caused automobile manufacturers to greatly augment the proportion of closed car production to total output.

To the casual observer, grace of line, beauty of finish and upholstery, and features of equipment count for most in judging closed car quality, and naturally so, for these are surface evidences and important ones. But with the body as with the chassis, most of the features of quality are hidden, and those hidden features have a vital bearing upon the service, comfort and satisfaction which the owner enjoys.

In the realm of coach building Studebaker has had rare experience, and this experience, gained in seventy years of vehicle building, has proved that body strength, weight resistance to shock, and freedom from annoying rattles must be constantly subjected to searching analysis and later to gruelling road test under every possible condition of road and weather. The exact position of a screw in the wooden framework upon which the body metal is mounted is carefully studied and exactly specified, for upon



The Coupe for Four is finished in rich blue and black, striped in red. Silk velours upholstery, heater, dome light, visor, rear view mirror, etc., are standard equipment.

What Would You Expect to Pay for a Car So Fine?

Here is a new Coupe of rare beauty. It has a Fisher-built body—luxurious in its appointments and complete to the smallest detail.

It has a brand new, L-head, six-cylinder engine—smoother, quieter and more powerful, and carrying a 15,000 mile performance guarantee.

It has Four-wheel Brakes—simple, tried and true—for greater driving security.

Its controls are all centralized on the steering wheel—exclusively new and remarkably convenient.

And, withal, it shows a road performance, under every condition, that amazes the most critical drivers.

What would you expect to pay for this thoroughly fine closed car? Your guess, if based on previous experience or values, will be wrong—for the price is only $1345 f. o. b. factory.

The Sedan and Business Coupe are just as fine and complete as the Coupe for Four. At $1395, and $1195, respectively, f. o. b. factory, their values are just as convincing. Be fair with yourself and your family. See the True Blue Oakland before you buy.

See the 1924 Model Big-Sixes At the Closed Car Show

IN the Studebaker Big-Six closed cars you get all the performance, all the comfort, and all the dependability that any car can give—at a price smaller producers cannot even approach.

The Big-Six will take the steepest hills on high. It will maintain a high rate of speed over long stretches hour after hour. Yet no car is better adapted to constant city use. None provides more restful riding—none is easier to operate. None is freer from frequent repairs.

And all the equipment you will ever want or need is an integral part of the car. It is complete even to an extra disc wheel with tire, tube and tire cover (two on Sedan); handsome nickel-plated bumpers, front and rear; and large enameled steel trunk.

The low prices of the Big-Six closed cars are due to large volume and to the fact that Studebaker overhead is shared by three models—all Sixes. Then, too, only one manufacturing profit is included in the Big-Six price because all vital parts are manufactured in Studebaker plants.

If you spend more than the Big-Six price you can buy more weight and bulkiness and pay more for overhead and operation but you will not get a better automobile.

The name Studebaker is assurance of satisfaction.

In the building of the framework of a closed body all sills, pillars, roof rails, doors and supporting members are made from selected ash, and subjected to rigid inspection through the various stages of manufacture. Each piece of the frame is machined in heavy jigs, making possible the tight joints so essential to a closed body. Wherever conditions call for it, the mortise and tenon joint is used, joined solidly together with hot, animal glue and further strengthened by the liberal use of wood screws, bolts and braces.

Doors are hung on three sturdy malleable iron hinges. As additional protection against rattles and squeaks in service, a special spring dovetail is provided on each door, which is automatically adaptable to any conditions encountered. Two heavy rubber bumpers, mechanically adjustable for wear, take care of any transverse vibrations.

Bracing where the greatest strains occur is important, and in this connection it may be mentioned that there is a total of eight braces in the front end of the body alone. This gives an idea of the construction that is carried out through the entire body.

The main consideration is to build the body so that it will endure as long as the chassis and will operate quietly throughout its years of life.

PRETTY SOFT FOR PAPYRUS

Papyrus, the great English Derby winner, has a marked preference for closed cars. Here is his carefully built van which carried him from the S. S. Aquitania to Belmont Park, N. Y., where he will meet the best in American 3 year olds. Yes, he had a motorcycle escort, as well as a closed car, for his overland journey.

Watch the Gauge.

The oil pump gauge is put on the dash of the car for the purpose of showing the driver whether the bearings and cylinders are being properly lubricated. If this gauge does not register pressure, immediately stop your car and check up on the oil in the crank case. If you have plenty there, prime the oil pump. Continuing to drive a car after the pump refuses to register pressure, which is the danger signal, may result in serious damage to the motor.

Sixty Leaders of Industry Sign Up for Annual Show

THE largest and most enthusiastic throng of motor car executives ever attracted to New York apart from the actual week of the annual show was in attendance at the 258th field artillery armory to participate in the drawing for spaces at the coming national shows in New York and Chicago. Interest in the affair was heightened by reason of the fact that the 1924 show in New York, to be held during the week of Jan. 5 to 12, will be in an environment and atmosphere entirely different from that to which exhibitors and visitors have been accustomed.

To a great majority of the visitors the immensity of the armory came as a complete surprise. That it was large they had expected, but the vastness of the space had been realized by few until they actually stepped into the great drill hall. Three hundred feet from side to side and twice that length, the new stage for the motor car display offers incomparably the finest setting for a great exposition that New York can offer.

It was unanimously predicted that in its new environment, accommodating all the complete cars and accessories on one floor, the national show of 1924 will prove a bigger success, from the standpoints both of attendance and business, than any in the past.

The drawing began shortly after 2 o'clock, and the afternoon was well gone before the last of the exhibitors had made their final decisions as to the available spaces they considered most desirable. It was generally agreed that with a one-floor display all the space is extremely desirable, and there was not the slightest disposition to cavil at the outlook.

Sixty-six makes of complete passenger cars and half a dozen varieties of taxicabs will be on display in the 1924 show.

Newest Sedan.

The H. C. S. Motor Car company has just announced its newest model, a five passenger sedan, which made its first appearance on the row this month.

The bodies are of aluminum throughout. All window and door frames are cast from aluminum in one piece, thereby eliminating all disagreeable noises and rattles. The body is shaped from heavy sheet aluminum formed in graceful design to the latest and most practical body design.

DOPE ON DOBBIN.

In ten years the number of horses in the world has decreased 11 per cent, the decrease in the United States exceeding 13 per cent.

Special Motors Secret of Best Inclosed Models

"AUTOMOBILE manufacturers are prone to speak in glowing terms about the rapidly increasing popularity of the inclosed automobile," said John A. Rogers, Stutz distributor, yesterday. "Invariably they predict that closed car sales will far outdistance the sale of open cars in the near future.

"Undoubtedly these predictions are well founded, and I believe they will come true because the trend of desire on the part of the motoring public is certainly towards the closed car.

"However, I feel that this is an opportune time to point out that there still are motorists who retain a certain prejudice against the closed car—a prejudice based entirely on the belief that the ordinary closed car does not deliver the performance to be found in the open car of similar make.

"In many cases, these motorists say, the extra weight of the closed car overburdens and overtaxes the power of the engine, which originally was built for the open car and then, later, was adapted to the closed model. Naturally, with the increased weight, the motor would not be as nimble or responsive nor possess the hill climbing ability that is known in the open car. It's just like adding extra weight to a race horse and then expecting him to make as good time, say these motorists.

"Our engine was specifically designed and planned for the sedan and it was constructed with that end in view. The engineers knew that if the motive power was ample for satisfactory performance in the sedan it would be more than ample for the touring car and roadster.

"The closed car is gaining in sales, but the manufacturer who tries to sell a closed car with a motor built primarily for an open car will find his closed car sales not advancing as rapidly as he might wish for. The motoring public is becoming more educated every day."

To Keep Passes Open.

For the first time in highway history, the state of Washington will use many snowplows in an effort to keep the paved roads open far into the winter. Between forty and fifty plows of various types have been obtained by the highway department and stationed at central districts along the main high lines where snow is expected. Snoqualmie pass, winter's Gibraltar in the Cascade mountains, is the only passage from eastern Washington to the west side and for the first time plows will try to overcome the snow blockades.

Winter Driving Is Made a Pleasure by the Closed Car

"Due to the refinements of the closed car, it is no longer the custom to lay up the car for the winter," H. T. Ames, manager of the Cleveland Six agency said yesterday. "At no time during the year is an automobile a greater convenience than during the cold winter months.

"To go to the theater, office, or any of the many places made accessible by the clean streets of the city, or the hard packed, smooth roads in the country, there is no means more delightful than the closed car. Heated by the exhaust, protected from the wind by the close fitting glass windows, one is as comfortable as if one were at home before an open fire.

"The country is never more enjoyable than when gliding over the surface of the snow, which smoothes down the bumps and holes in the road, making it a pleasure to be alive and out in the open. The exhilaration of a winter drive through the country cannot be described.

"The popularity of the closed car in touring overland has proved it as practical for hard usage of this kind. The general trend of buying is towards closed cars, and they come more and more into general use as the motoring public becomes more and more accustomed to their advantages."

Modern Genius Given Credit for Your Closed Car

Centuries of Coach Work Eclipsed in Fifteen Years.

BY J. I. FARLEY.
[President Auburn Automobile Company.]

THE development of the present day closed car must be credited entirely to the coach builders of the twentieth century. When you see a state coach of medieval days in a museum or in a picture you see the earliest closed wheeled vehicle, but it is the ancestor of today's closed car in appearance only. In no detail of construction does that vehicle approximate the comfort, security, and luxury of the present day product.

A study of the history of vehicles and of motor cars will establish beyond question the vast improvement in transportation that has come in the later days of the automobile. Horse drawn carriages had to be light in weight. The builder could add no improvement that would increase the load. As a result improvements came seldom if ever. Creative effort on the part of coach builder stagnated for centuries. When expressed at all it took the form of costly embellishment, carving, painting, gilt and tinsel, that added nothing to the comfort or security of the passenger.

We have seen the closed car, the marvelous creation it is today, actually develop from scratch under our eyes. It is a true product of the last ten or fifteen years. We recall every step in its evolution, every condition that brought about its tremendous popularity. We know in detail every improvement that has been added. Let those inclined to doubt the statement that the closed car belongs in its entirety to the twentieth century recall the first motor cars, built in the last years of the nineteenth.

When the pioneers undertook to build their cars their primary concern was to build a vehicle that would run. All of their effort was pointed to the perfection of an instrument of travel that would move consistently up hill as well as down. Much has been said about the early builders clinging to the design of horse drawn carriages and buggies in their first efforts. They couldn't do anything else. The early engines ranged in power from a couple of horsepower to six or eight. Their cars had to be kept to the minimum weight. The design of the horse drawn vehicle was ready to hand; it was light; it was familiar, it was taken and used. Satisfactory mechanical operation was the vital problem, comfort of passengers a remote thought.

So the first motor cars were built without tops. They were fair weather toys, as we look back at them now. Even later, when the multiple horsepower engines had freed the designer from his previous weight limitation and the touring car with its folding top came on the market, few owners attempted to drive during the winter months, and usually kept their tops folded back during the summer season. Summer touring was a sport that demanded plenty of opportunity to see and be seen and the "one man" top became the principal talking point of the salesmen of the period.

There is some controversy as to the date of the building of the first closed car and who built it. These facts are not so important as the fact that it was built. When it was built, the mechanical details of the motor car were well on the way to today's perfection. Owners were driving their cars the year round, had been doing it for some time. The self starter came in and made it unnecessary to crank the car on a cold morning. So the pioneers of winter driving started out in touring cars, protected from blizzards by thin curtains, rarely able to see anywhere but straight ahead.

This condition could not long continue in the keenly competitive field the automobile industry had early become. Stimulated by the public demand for a comfortable all year car, the coach builder went to work and produced the first closed car. It had little to recommend it alongside of today's creations. The first ones were very expensive because they were practically built by hand, without the assistance of the jigs and tools that make quality production in vast quantity possible today. But they were needed and wanted and production has moved upward by leaps and bounds until today half the production of many factories is of closed models.

The first closed car had few of today's refinements. Only one or two of the windows could be lowered. It was stuffy and hot in summer. The skill of the designers changed that soon. Straps were provided for raising or lowering the windows. Not perfect, but a step forward. Even these straps have now passed into the discard with the development of mechanical window lifters and catches. Big windows opened to the breeze make present day closed cars as comfortable in summer as in winter.

We have achieved closed car luxury by constant improvement. Old style strap door checks have been replaced by invisible checks that slide into the doors and body. Big heaters provide fireside warmth. Reading lamps in addition to dome lights relieve the tedium of waits. Cushions are as deep and comfortable as an overstuffed couch. The bodies of the best closed cars are tight and sturdy, even after thousands of miles of rough going.

Today's sedan is the superb vehicle of the centuries—the culmination of the art of the coach builder. It offers the most comfortable and luxurious method of transportation the world ever has known. It is completely a product of present day skill in design and craftsmanship. For this accomplishment, above all others, the utmost credit must be given to the present generation of automotive engineers and builders.

FALL MONTHS CALLED DANGER PERIOD FOR AUTOMOBILE OWNERS

POINTING to the safe operation of motor vehicles on the highways as one of the chief problems of the motoring world, Charles Clifton, president of the association, called upon the members of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce at the fall meeting to give their personal services and enlist their organizations in the elimination of accidents.

President Clifton stated that there were three main facts in the motor accident situation:

Motor accidents will be greater this year than last if the present rate keeps up.

The peak of highway accidents, mortality statistics show, is in October and November.

These hazards can be avoided if enough public interest is aroused.

Good Roads Keep Saturation Point on Autos Far Away

"Every once in a while you run across people who talk about the 'saturation point' in the sale of motor cars, and I cannot refrain from a quiet little smile to myself every time I hear such a conversation," said Harry P. Branstetter, Chicago Kissel dealer, yesterday.

"The saturation point in the sale of automobiles can never be reached. If we throughout the United States extend our hard roads, widen our city streets, and make room for the automobiles to percolate to the furthest corners of our country this condition can never exist. For every mile of good roads and good streets you are making new customers, new buyers, and new uses for the motor car. So when state legislatures and city councils throughout the country realize the economic advantages that follow each road and street improvement that is made the motor car industry will find a ready market for enormous productions.

"I am proud of being an enthusiast for good roads and more of them, good streets and more of them, good automobiles and more of them. I am not worrying a particle about the saturation point as long as I can be assured that our legislative bodies are good road enthusiasts."

Representative Cars.

H. W. Peters, general manager of the Packard Motor Car company of Chicago, gives additional proof of the increasing public interest in the inclosed motor car.

Commenting on the situation yesterday, he declared that not only have sales of inclosed models been unusually heavy during the early fall season, but the percentage of closed models sold throughout the entire year so far has been a positive indication that the public is appreciative of this comfortable travel.

He added that the company has attempted to render a representative showing of its inclosed cars at the show, but to display the entire line would be impossible, due to the restriction of space allotted.

THAWING OUT FROZEN PIPES.

A new device consists of a generator set, complete with switchboard and rheostat and having lengths of extension cord which carry electricity to the frozen pipes. It is hauled by motor from door to door after the manner of a cleaning or fumigating machine.

1924 MODEL Chummy Sedan $1785 F. O. B. Cleveland

Beauty, Comfort—Master Performance

EVEN if it were not more delightful to handle than closed cars of comparable character, the Chummy Sedan would still merit a large measure of the popularity it now enjoys.

It is a closed car of singular charm, perfectly proportioned, luxuriously comfortable, appointed in excellent taste, and constructed throughout in a sound and substantial manner.

What lifts this handsome Chandler model far above all other cars, is that it contains the biggest advance in motor car design since the self starter—The

Traffic Transmission

Built complete in the Chandler plant

under Campbell patents, the Traffic Transmission eliminates all gear shifting evils and dangers. The totally new principle it involves insures, at all normal driving speeds, a positive, silent, instantaneous shift by the least experienced driver.

Combined with the Traffic Transmission in the 1924 Chandler, is the

with its established high gear supremacy retained, and with its operation made flawlessly smooth and noiseless by important improvements.

Unless you have driven the 1924 Chandler, you can have no idea of the amazing improvement in driving it affords. Come in! Ten minutes at the wheel tells all!

The outside edges of each frame are finished with extending feather-edge rubber. This rubber fills the space between frame and body, frame and top, and frame and frame. The frames never come in contact with the car or with each other, yet they are perfectly weather-tight and rattleproof.

All doors open. Two ventilators, easily controlled. No change required in touring top. Enclosure weighs about half as much as an average passenger. It can be removed in a few minutes for summer storage, and put on in a few hours. It stores flat against the wall; requires little space.

Makers Increase Body Designs to Meet This Demand.

BY WALTER C. DAVIS.
[Davis Distributor.]

AS we enter the last few months of 1923, which will undoubtedly prove to be the greatest year which the automobile industry has witnessed, there are a number of tendencies on the part of the motor buying public and corresponding reactions on the part of the industry which become increasingly apparent.

Mechanically, the automobile has arrived at such a stage that there have ceased to be any revolutionary changes. Automotive engineers everywhere are seeking for higher efficiency, but the changes they are making are evolutionary rather than revolutionary.

Coincident with this stabilization of the mechanical design of motor cars, there is developing among the motoring public a desire for a motor car which is, to some extent, personalized—a car which can be driven through the streets of the city and over the highways of the country without meeting hundreds of other cars of the same body design, the same general appearance, and the same color.

This is particularly true, I believe, of closed cars. The man, or woman, who buys an inclosed car, even more than those who buy open cars, are seeking not only a motor car of proved efficiency and dependability, but, further, are looking for motor cars which express their personal tastes, their individuality.

And motor car manufacturers are responding to this tendency, in different ways, as their manufacturing methods dictate. Many manufacturers are responding to it by increasing the number of body types in inclosed models, thereby varying the appearance of their closed car output.

Others are adding equipment of various sorts and styles, while still others are offering their cars, particularly their inclosed models, finished in a number of different colors, without additional cost, at the option of the buyer.

All of which goes to prove again, as it has been proved before, that it is the public, and not the manufacturer, who decided what the prevailing mode in motor cars shall be. And, in my estimation, it augurs well for the future of the motor car industry, for it indicates that public interest in motor cars is not lagging, but is, if anything, keener and more widespread than ever.

Gas Alley Takes Note of Cold Weather Aids

Ever have to open the carburetor on a zero morning and chip ice out of it with a screwdriver before you could get a flow of gasoline to the cylinders?

Or did you ever worry about the stiff riding qualities of your car when the snow and slush piled cakes of rust between spring leaves?

Walt, Doc, and maybe Phyllis are talking those things over in the Alley now. Of course with Avery it's different. He probably would take his carburetor in the house at night to avoid the troubles accruing from dirt and water in present day gas.

But the motorist looking for the most service in this season of closed cars and winter worries is preparing more than ever against the vagaries of weather. To enjoy the advantages of warmth, of course, the closed car is in demand, and to guard against frozen gas lines and squeaky, hard riding springs gasoline filters and spring covers have been provided by enterprising manufacturers.

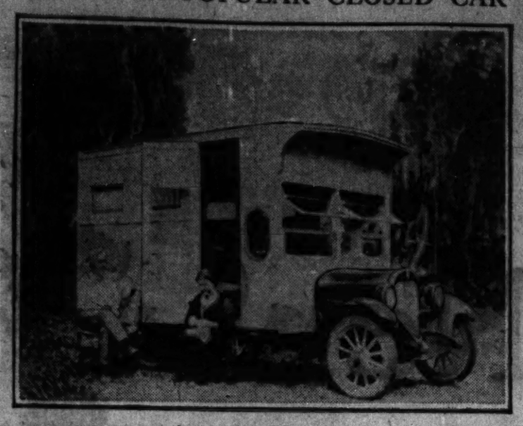
ANOTHER POPULAR CLOSED CAR



Speaking of closed models, national highways this year have literally teemed with "traveling country homes" like that pictured above. They range from the home-made, box car effect body lines to the $25,000 palace with running water and self-operating "still." This complete highway home, built on a Durant chassis and owned by W. E. Zierden of Philadelphia, is wandering through Dixie now on a winter cruise in search of sunshine.

SEES BIG INCREASE IN WORKMEN WHO BUY CLOSED CARS

A noticeable fact in the automobile industry is the rapidly increasing number of workingmen who are buying automobiles of the closed model.

Take Hamtramck, Mich., for instance. This is a city but little heard of outside Detroit, but it has a population of about 56,000 and is entirely surrounded by Detroit. It is a city within a city and the population is composed mostly of factory workers, without the usual "silk stocking" district of a city of that size.

Many of the workmen are selecting the closed cars to drive to and from work during the winter months. They figure that the cost of a sedan is more than repaid in comfort and the increased use of the car it makes possible. One of the big problems now confronting the officials of the great automobile plants is the sufficient provision of parking space for their employes' cars.

Four Million Extra for Better Streets

Figures just compiled by the asphalt association for the fiscal year Aug. 1, 1922, to Aug. 1, 1923, show an increase of more than $4,000,000 over the preceding year in funds authorized by the cities of the country for new street construction.

The bond issues authorized from Aug. 1, 1921, to Aug. 1, 1923, amounted to $101,421,275. Those authorized from Aug. 1, 1922, to Aug. 1, 1923, totaled $105,992,734. In addition to the bonds authorized, the figures show an additional $96,136,562 in bond issues still under contemplation or consideration. This is more than $1,000,000 in excess of the $97,271,771 still under contemplation as of Aug. 1, 1922.

This Official Will Broadcast Road Lore

A highway question box is a radio feature announced this week by Twin Cities station WLAG for 6 p. m., Charles M. Babcock, state highway commissioner, agreed to answer personally at that hour any questions regarding state highway plans, policies, and progress that are submitted in advance, addressed to him at St. Paul.

The plan follows the suggestion from many that an hour be assigned to answer questions about the highways.

Sales of Closed Cars Rise as Days of Winter Approach

"Our sales of closed cars runs as high as 40 per cent of our total in summer and up to 60 per cent in the fall and winter," said George H. Bird of Bird-Sykes company, Paige and Jewett distributors.

"It is an interesting thing to look back over the twenty years we have been in business and recall how the public's favor has swung around to closed cars. People used to think that a closed body was heavy—as, indeed, many of them were in the old days. Being heavy, there was a feeling such cars couldn't be taken off the boulevards. Then again in the early days closed jobs were mostly custom made and cost from $2,500 to $3,000 for the body alone. Now for that money and less one gets a better closed car in every way than the body itself used to cost.

"A study of the weather reports here in Chicago shows that but a very small percentage of the days in a year are comfortable for driving an open car. Comfort in all weather is an unanswerable argument in favor of closed cars, and with lighter bodies and greater power you'll see closed cars hitting the trails to far places at all seasons of the year."

"VOICE OF MOTORIST" ASKS RECIPROCITY IN EACH STATE OF U. S.

UNIFORM reciprocity of automobile licenses among the states was advocated in the address of M. O. Eldridge, executive chairman of the American Automobile association, which was broadcast last week from WRC station of the Radio Corporation of America. Arrangements have been made whereby officials or representatives of the A. A. A. will talk to motorists every Wednesday night at 8 o'clock, standard eastern time, on some subject of special interest to motorists.

In his address Mr. Eldridge called attention to the fact that there are sixteen states which permit motorists from other states to use their roads freely for the full period granted by the visitor's state up to the remainder of the licensed period. The reciprocal period in the remaining states is from ten to ninety days.

vehicles to the extent necessary for an even, uninterrupted flow of traffic.

SECOND, the entrances to hotels, office buildings, large stores and other buildings in which there is a great amount of coming and going must be kept accessible.

THIRD, so far as is consistent with the foregoing, car owners should be permitted to park their cars on the public streets or other public space in front of or close to their destination and leave the cars there all day if they so desire. The third generalization is, of course, an ideal and as with ideals can be only more or less approximated.

Between all day parking and the stop to discharge passengers before a hotel, there are gradations in time limits the value of which is still largely theoretical. Whether a fifteen minute parking limit is, as a rule, of practical use, may be questioned. For the man who reads your gas meter this would be ample. Perhaps it should suffice for the life insurance agent. But it is not enough for the woman who is buying material for a new set of curtains. Perhaps we shall come to a simple three-fold classification of parking spaces on business streets; stop to discharge passengers, shipping stops which may extend for fifteen minutes to half a day, and all day parking.

But with all the time limit expedients we can devise our streets in the business districts and in many apartment house districts are now inadequate to contain all the cars whose owners wish to park them there. Supplementary parking space must be provided.

Chicago Sets Example.

In towns and cities where there are considerable areas near the business section—but not with valuable business frontage—still unbuilt upon, the municipality should acquire these and maintain them for automobile parking. It may charge car owners a small fee for this service on the principle that it charges users of city water, or it may give the accommodation free on the principle that it permits free use of the sewers, to take care of what might otherwise become a public nuisance.

Chicago, for example, is already using part of Grant park along Michigan boulevard for parking, and Brockton, Mass., has created an open space in the business district for this purpose. There is also a large field for private enterprise which would cater to those owners who have the means to pay for service, who wish their cars protected from storm and sun when not in use, who need mechanical assistance or who just feel more comfortable when their cars are safe from thieves. To meet this demand a number of methods are now being tried out, ranging all the way from storage buildings several stories in height equipped with automobile elevators to the use of basements or cellars reached by ramps. Private initiative also has seized upon vacant lots and in some cases the back yards of business blocks and is using these temporarily for automobile parks.

Washington, which has a larger proportion of its down town area given up to streets than any other city and which has many down town streets so wide that cars can be parked at an angle on both curbs, seems to find the parking problem as difficult as other cities. The reason apparently is that the greater parking area results in a greater use of automobiles. It is the antithesis of New York City, where in lower Manhattan the very limited parking space almost prevents the use of private cars. That is, the greater parking space puts off the saturation point and thereby benefits the community.

The truck presents problems peculiar to itself. Except for the small retail delivery truck, its size alone makes difficulty. If parked parallel to the curb it takes up a large amount of space and is placed inconveniently for loading and unloading. If parked at an angle it projects so far into the roadway and often so far over the sidewalk as to be a very real impediment to traffic.

Opposes Auto Subways.

You will have noted that in this discussion there is no suggestion for automobile subways or for double decked streets or for sidewalks raised a story above the roadway. All of these have been suggested in more than one city and in New York such suggestions have assumed very definite form. My belief is that automobile subways would be not only ruinously expensive but that they would be community liabilities in other ways.

An argument may be made for such construction if it is of small extent and undertaken in connection with other improvements, as on South Water street in Chicago, but this is exceptional. Raised sidewalks would provide a great amount of parking space beneath, but, even assuming that they can be hung on brackets or supported in some other way not necessitating posts or pillars which create a hazard for traffic, they, with the required bridges across intersecting streets, would shadow and darken the roadways and parking spaces below.

On main streets in retail business districts the roadway should be wide enough for a line of cars on each side, parked at an angle of 45 degrees, for a line of traffic in each direction and for two trolley car lines.

When we say that no American motor car, regardless of price, excels the New Peerless Eight in performance, dependability, beauty and comfort, we ask you to accept the strictly literal meaning of our words.

And then we ask that you proceed to demonstrate their truth, to yourself and for yourself.

The superior performance and beauty and comfort of the New Peerless are demonstrable in a half hour's ride.

Its dependability is dwelt upon, again and again in the letters which our owners constantly write to us.

No car, we believe, can show a finer record than Peerless in this regard.

Your own experience with cars of the highest class will help to establish our contention on the other three points.

If Peerless has not been included in that experience, prepare yourself to make an entirely new estimate of luxurious motoring when you have your first contact with the New Peerless Eight.

Gray Goose Special and Seven Passenger Phaeton

Enlarged scope of Wills Sainte Claire production plans now places at your command two new and additional body styles, each on a longer wheelbase.

The new Five-Passenger Gray Goose Special uses this additional length for increased interior roominess, and the installation of built-in baggage facilities at the rear.

The Seven-Passenger Wills Sainte Claire Phaeton devotes it to the full conventional maximum of passenger accommodations.

In both these additions to the Wills Sainte Claire line, the increased length still further emphasizes the low-hung, close-to-the-ground lines so characteristic of Wills Sainte Claire, and responsible in so great a degree for the car's ability to "hold-the-road" at all times, regardless of speed or surface.

In smoothness, riding comfort, and in the delight which always features the privilege of piloting a Wills Sainte Claire, these cars are also true to the standards of Wills Sainte Claire Craftsmanship, for motor and chassis are—except for the changes implied by the additional length—unchanged from the design which has made Wills Sainte Claire Performance the marvel of motordom.

The famous eight-cylinder Wills Sainte Claire motor, with its amazing smoothness and flexibility and its wonderful power range remains as characteristically simple and economically efficient as ever before.

Upholstery is another advanced detail of both cars—in grain, softness and wearing qualities, the latest example of Wills Sainte Claire Craftsmanship.

These additions complete and round out the Wills Sainte Claire line, and enable you to enjoy Wills Sainte Claire transportation in every standard body style—Roadster, Five-Passenger Phaeton, Brougham, Sedan, Town Car, Coupe, Limousine, Seven-Passenger Phaeton, and Gray Goose Special.

DAME FASHION O.K's GOLDEN DAYS AND SILVERY NIGHTS

by Mary Eleanor Howell

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—It's a little early to say what's the style. But what's in style gives us another story as variegated as Joseph's coat. Quite true that autumn so far has not brought out anything revolutionary.

Rearrangements keynote the situation.

Take, for instance, the law governing the use of metallic cloth. The ordinary idea is that the splendor of gold belongs to the hour of full dress, while the pale luster of silver may comport with informality.

Not at all so this season!

"Gold for daytime," says Dame Fashion; "silver for evening."

In her realm, however, caprice is the countersign, and if almost in the next breath one has to describe an evening frock lighted with golden splashes or a daytime costume employing silver embroidery it's all in the day's work. The pebbled gold overblouse monsieur shows you in his salon of sprawled dolls with twining, octopuslike limbs is meant for wear with a tan camel's hair street suit, not for more or less informal evening use.

The building of a wrap or coat for practically every handsome dress is another matter of new arrangements. The connotation is not so marked that the garment cannot be used with anything else, as once was the case.

For example, the broadcloth dress which monsieur requests the mannequin to put on to illustrate that the sheathlike, unbelted silhouette is still in vogue is immediately followed by a three-quarters coat of the same black broadcloth; that three-quarter coat would look admirable with any gown.

Yet when frock and coat are added together each gains distinction and elegance.

The black broadcloth frock has practically no trimming but a streak of gold banding running from the neck down the front of the bodice and suddenly swerving over to a pocket. Matching this pocket on the other side is an embroidery of little jagged lightning streaks. The flare cuff is piped with gold. The bottom of the coat has a border of many folds of the broadcloth, each headed with narrow gold braid, and the neck finish is a straight mandarin band. When the coat is on, the splash of gold to the front of the frock gains value.

So with a geranium crepe afternoon frock of jenny which he showed next. It buttoned straight down the front, beginning under the chin, until it met at the bust line a broad plaited panel. This front panel extended to the edge of the skirt except for a wide band of black velvet which bordered the front and side edges of the hem, but not the back. The sleeves, fulled at the lower part, were tied closely to the wrist with narrow black velvet ribbon.

Then the model donned the black velvet coat designed to wear with it, and your impression of the value of the plaited front and black banded skirt edge was something different again. Lining of geranium crepe coupled the wrap with the dress.

The skirt of this frock was a little fulled at the waistline in the back, by the way, and it had a narrow band girdle of the crepe, thus registering another rearrangement with respect to backs.

The circular skirt appears oftener as fall sets in, both on street frocks and more formal costumes. It is a bold effect that takes in the whole skirt from hip to hem, not the tentative hint made in a bit of front flare, as during the first days of the new season.

First at the left I am showing the circular skirt in a frock which may be designated as afternoon or dinner, as you will, for a somewhat definite decolletage is appearing of afternoons, no sleeves still being the rule in many instances, and a round neck line so low that it almost conflicts with a full evening dress cut. Black flat crepe is used for the circular skirt of No. 1 and black figured satin for the upper part. Both sides of the waist are lightly nipped in, and one side carries a fan shaped ornament of rhinestones.

Varying the sameness of the choker necklace, madam of the circular skirt initiates a new neck finish, consisting of narrow satin ribbon made into flowerlike motif in front and carred over the neck and down the back, where it knots with loose streamer ends.

The wrap shown in the center, No. 3, a brilliant green velvet with two circular flares of rich black velvet and a huge collar of white ermine, and triangular motifs of black floss embroidery on the green body, was worn at the opening of a famous supper club in the village to which the leading figures of stagedom and society flock.

Its rose colored lining brought it into an ensemble with the gown it covered on entering—a rose velvet with cascading drapery on the right side held with three circlets of rhinestones, pictured as No. 4. And, in accord with liking for new arrangements of the changing season, there was a smaller drapery at the left side, too. Rhinestone shoulder straps held up the simple, slightly fitted sheath slip.

The fancy for gold thread embroidery on afternoon frocks is again illustrated in No. 2, an import of the first water, just pressed after leaving the bonded warehouse. Two shades of blue georgette crepe were employed—hydrangea and a deep hue almost violet. The slip of hydrangea blue bordered with the violet blue was embroidered at the right side with a half sun of gold threads, then the violet blue was drapped in loops from the shoulder over it, half hiding it, and a broad, loose girdle adjusted at the hip line, broadened on the side opposite. A little touch of the gold thread embroidery decorated the sleeves, leg of mutton in effect.

The tailored coat dress, now definitely established and having a great deal of say-so in every fashionable daytime gathering, had a delightful rendition in a smart frock seen in a fashionable restaurant at lunch time. It was of navy blue serge, its only trimming being fine tucks and a buckle. The tucks were placed in insets on the collar, cuffs, and single pocket, and made a widening panel at the left side of the skirt, where the closing was. There was a belt of self-material with outstanding ends, held by the buckle of old blue and dark blue enamel. The frock is pictured as No. 5. The hatter's plush cloche was flatly trimmed with a fan of white grosgrain ribbon.

With the wearer of the coat frock was a girl in a black and white mixture tailleur, worn with a scarf cravat of white silk and a small black felt cloche, and she had on white stockings. A taste for white stockings seems about to supplant the sunburnt hue. Shops are displaying them widely.

The suit color making most headway on last count was gray, with a lustrous gray pile fabric, its surface cut up to give it a check appearance, often appearing on the avenue, made into long coats as well as suits.

As for knitted fabrics, they appear in all combinations and permutations. Nothing new about the idea, but much new in its latest developments. For example, a green jersey frock opening over a ruffled underskirt of gleaming black satin and with a cowled neck finish of black satin and a basque dress of the same hue, also of jersey, that made their appearance in a window set with sports hats and hung with scarfs of many derivations, thus establishing the fact that the so-called sports attire keeps on broadening its field, regardless of what other formal dress lines its invades.

Sport skirts and hose get more brilliant, while sweaters hold to plain colors.

O MY SON — BY MARY HEATON VORSE

"MY SON," an experience story, by Mary Heaton Vorse, begins today. Mrs. Vorse is one of the most popular serial and short story writers of the day. Her work is widely read and highly appreciated. This new story of hers is full of human interest and carries a universal appeal to mothers and fathers, sons and daughters.

THE GREAT MOMENT.

THE great moment had come. They were alone together. For the first time Paula looked at her son. All of her life had been preparing her for this. Paula had read about it in a hundred books. They put your baby in your arms and over you there rushes a wave of emotion such as you had never known. When a mother holds her first born in her arms, a beatitude like no other is hers.

Paula waited. Nothing happened. No flood of mother love carried her to heaven's heights. The nurse, starched and efficient, had brought her son to her with a smug and satisfied air. Indeed, Miss Spong's manner conveyed the idea that it was she instead of Paula who had accomplished the miracle of birth. She put the baby down on the pillow beside Paula, presenting him to her with an air which said, "See what a fine piece of work I've done."

The doctor had acted much the same way. He said, "It's a magnificent boy! Haven't seen such a fine baby in many a long day." He was as complacent as if he'd brought the baby with him in his black bag.

Paula still waited for the overpowering rush of maternal affection which was to be greater than the love she had for David, greater than any other thing she had ever experienced. Nothing like this happened. Neither did she feel the immense rest and peace descend upon her that the books tell about. She was very uncomfortable, tired beyond speech, yet so wide awake she thought she would never sleep again.

She raised herself cautiously and took stock of the baby. He was smaller than she had imagined anything human could be. Eight pounds! Magnificent! He was puny, tiny and red. His face was red. A wisp of red down straggled from under his cap. The sleeves of his batiste dress were rolled up, and from them protruded small clenched red fists. His eyes were open—blue eyes and far apart. They stared at nothing. He had no eyebrows at all. This lack disturbed Paula so that she stretched out her hand gingerly and felt the place where eyebrows should be. She could feel a little down. There he lay, her longed for son—her son and David's. Red as a lobster, curiously creased and yet indescribaly a person. In his aspect there was something belligerent. His red forehead was puckered in a frown. His determined fists were belligerent.

Then in Paula's heart there welled up unexpectedly a flood of pity.

"You poor thing," she thought. "You poor little, little thing—you poor thing, you poor little thing!" The little wrinkled red face—the red fists that would measure scarcely an inch around, made her feel all the sorrier for him. He had come into the world frowning, and his fists clenched ready to fight.

The unexpected flood of emotion was too much for Paula's strength. An immense feeling of weakness engulfed her. He frightened her—this tiny fighting baby that was hers and David's. Unexpectedly she burst into tears. Her hand, as if of its own accord, grasped the little bell beside her bed. The nurse bustled in.

"What's the matter, Mrs. Andrews?" she inquired primly.

"I want—my husband," Paula blubbered. "I want—David."

"But——" the nurse began.

"I want my husband, I tell you," Paula cried.

David had heard her voice and hurried into the room to put comforting arms around her, while Paula's arms went around his neck like a child frightened in the night.

"I—I feel so—alone," she sobbed.

"She shouldn't be allowed to excite herself," the nurse commented, disapprovingly.

David raised his head. "She isn't exciting herself, Miss Spong. I know what she wants."

"She needs rest and quiet," persisted the nurse in her accepted hospital voice.

"She needs me," said David.

The Quarrel.

Most babies when they're born have their names already waiting for them. If the fighting baby had been a girl, everything would have been easy. Mary was the name sitting there waiting. David's mother and Paula's mother were called Mary. But they both, David and Paula, had known that their baby was going to be a boy, and they had quarreled about his name.

"Polly," whispered David, his head buried in her hair, "I'm sorry—about his name, you know."

"What's his name?" asked Paula, a smile flickering around her mouth.

"His name's David," he answered, turning his face away a little. He buried his face in Paula's hair again. This was the end of the long warfare, and David was the kind of man who could not easily give way.

The quarrel over the baby's name had gone this way.

"He's going to be called David," Paula had said.

"Not much he isn't. I'm not going to have a son burdened with the name of June—they always call 'em June when they're named after their fathers. Call him 'May' at once and be done with it. The name of our baby's going to be Anthony, after my father!"

"Tony!" Paula had mocked. "I love that for a boy's name! It's a nice, manly name, Tony. Why don't you call him after your great-grandfather, Hiram, then they'll call him Hi!"

"I will not have a son of mine named June," said David with finality.

"No son of mine is going to be burdened with the name of Tony," said Paula.

David had stared at her. He hadn't noticed before how remarkably firm her face could be. He remembered her mother and grandmother, handsome, dominant women. "Bossy," was David's secret name for them. He had always thanked God that Paula was what he termed "reasonable."

So the battle between them had gone on. Sometimes it lurked in corners. Sometimes the quarrel had sprung out at them as though from ambush and their peace suddenly lay shattered in fragments. For months the quarrel had been there, sleeping sometimes, but ready to wake up at a moment's notice, and neither David nor Paula had given an inch.

Now the quarrel was dead. The baby had killed it.

For a long time Paula lay quiet, immeasurably happy. Her sudden terror at the baby put to flight by David's comforting presence. After a long time she spoke.

"I don't want him called David any more. I want his name to be what you want. His name's Anthony." David held her closer, but as gently as though she was something so fragile it would break at a touch.

It was a moment of complete understanding. Paula would have liked to have had this moment go on and on until she fell asleep. Presently David released her gently again with a tenderness she hadn't known he possessed. He got up and looked at David-Anthony. Paula could see him trying to assume a nonchalant air about the baby, but pride streamed out of him like a searchlight.

The Unnatural Mother.

Since the quarrel over the baby's name was ended, David could give himself up to the contemplation of his son. Everything seemed right in the world; the anxiety over Paula, which had been in the background of his mind, was over, too; this formless anxiety had always been there. It had been like a shadow which would blanket him with cold in the midst of his work, in the midst of his play. The words that went with it were, "What if something should go wrong?" He had refused to look at it. He told himself not to be a fool, but all that hadn't helped. Now the anxiety was as dead as the quarrel over the baby's name. David knew now that in sleeping and waking that anxiety had followed him. Life had become a tranquil place. Instead of anxiety there was Anthony, his own son, a strong baby.

David had never looked at a little baby with deep attention before. He had held the comic picture attitude toward new born infants; they squalled nights and you walked the floor with them. That was all he knew about them. He looked at Anthony with attention. It seemed in a way miraculous that anything so tiny should have perfect hands and perfect feet. His mind swept ahead to the time when this little red object should follow him on stout legs, calling him "Father." His pride broke from him in words:

"Gee!" he said. "That's a grand baby! It's a superbaby. Say, Polly, I never knew a little baby could be such a regular fellow, right off, from the start. I went once to a ward of a hospital with a doctor and they looked like worms compared to him. Gee! I wish you could have seen them wash and dress—Anthony." He continued gazing at the baby in rapt attention.

A feeling of physical cold came over Paula. Here, at this moment, when she needed her husband more than she had ever needed him in her life, he had slipped from her and entered into communication with that lobster red creature that was her son. He had forgotten about her, absorbed in Anthony, absorbed in his own pride. Slow tears began sliding down Paula's face; the bitterest tears in the world, tears that come from feeling left out.

David sat down beside the baby. "I tell you, old fellow," he said, "you and I are going to have grand times together. Just wait till I teach you how to sail a boat. Look at his fists, Paula, all clenched up. Some fighter, eh? Some fighter already. Nobody's going to put anything over on him!" Paula didn't answer. David looked up. "Polly! Paula! What's the matter?" His arms were around her again. "I don't wonder you cry after—everything."

"It's—it's not that," she sobbed. "I'm not—a good mother!"

He smoothed her hair. "Silly! You're only a mother two hours old. Not a good mother!"

"I'm not! I'm not!" said Paula. "You feel about him the way a father should feel."

"Well, you feel about him the same way, too."

Paula choked back her tears. She would die before she would acknowledge that she was jealous and of her own baby.

"Tell me what's the matter," David begged, stroking her hair. "Tell me all about it." There's nothing so unnerving as sympathy when you're weak. Tears came again.

"It's—that—I'm not a natural mother!" sobbed Paula. "He scares me. I don't love him. Not as I ought to!"

Miss Spong Knows What Is Needed.

After Paula had revealed the awful state of things to her husband, after he had been told that his wife was an unnatural, unloving mother, David threw back his head and laughed. Paula's face was lost in the pillow; he could see only the young oval of her cheek. A muffled voice protested.

"It's no laughing matter!"

"Turn your head so I can look at you," David commanded. "Turn you head to me, Polly." She didn't move. "I said turn your head so I can look at you." He sat down beside her. "I've got something to tell you, too." Paula turned to him. He looked as if some weight had been taken off him, more boyish than she remembered him seeming for a long time. "I've got something to tell you, too. Do you know what I've been thinking all these months? You know they say the minute a woman's got a baby, she doesn't care for her husband any more. Well, I've been afraid of that. I've been jealous, jealous as the deuce. I thought the minute Anthony was born, you wouldn't have any more use for me at all. I'd just be something they keep in the woodshed. When I heard you call for me, well, I just felt a hundred years younger."

"You needn't have worried," said Paula. "Things don't happen the way they write about in books."

"It's not only in books. I've seen it happen myself. I've seen men shoved right off the map the minute there was a baby in the house."

"That's when a woman's never been happy with her husband, anyway," Paula explained. "It couldn't happen with you and me, don't you see?"

"You're just a little fool, Polly, that's what you are. I'm not through yet—being jealous. I'm always going to be afraid that he'll—make you care more for him than you do for me."

"Maybe he will," said Paula, "by and bye."

A feeling of drowsiness began to creep over her, a drowsiness that had its roots in a happiness so deep she couldn't measure it. Her son was there beside her. She was well and strong, and David understood about everything.

Just then the door opened. Miss Spong stood in the doorway. "Mr. Andrews," she said reproachfully, "it's time your wife had some rest."

Paula put up a protesting hand. Rest! She was resting now as she'd never rested in her life. She hadn't known it before, but she'd been afraid, as almost all young mothers are. There's the dark door to be gone through that leads to birth. You don't know what may happen to you when you go through.

"What you need is sleep," Miss Spong said firmly. "I'll have to ask you to go, Mr. Andrews. I have my patient's welfare to look after. What's this? She's been crying. Emotion! If there's one thing a young mother should be guarded against, it's emotion. You've got her all upset. There ought to be rules that kept husbands out of the way for seven days, anyway, after a baby's born." Miss Spong's hospital intonation was imperative.

David kissed Paula gingerly, the kind of kiss Miss Spong would approve. He got up meekly; his departing back made Paula think of their big St. Bernard dog at home which a maiden aunt was perpetually sending out of the room. She turned her face away from Miss Spong, who had robbed her of what she needed most and who had taken away from her a moment that could never be recovered.

"There, there," said Miss Spong. "I know what's best for you, Mrs. Andrews. What you need is sleep."

Paula controlled her impulse to cry out, "What I need is David to put me to sleep." She said nothing. She felt more helpless than she had ever felt in her life. Never had she been so at the mercy of any one as she was of the efficient Miss Spong, who could send David away from her and who could decree with superhuman wisdom what Paula needed.

Anthony Eats.

There are all sorts of things that the books never tell young mothers. For instance, how could Paula know that some babies have to be taught how to eat? She had thought they came into the world with that knowledge.

But here was Anthony, whose manifest duty it was to begin to eat at once, not doing anything about it. When they brought him to Paula, he would close his mouth tightly and turn his head away.

"What's the matter with him?" she asked.

"There's nothing the matter with him," said Miss Spong. "Lots of babies are like this."

"Don't they know how to eat?" asked Paula.

"They know how, I suppose, but they just won't, most of them." Miss Spong opened Anthony's mouth with her finger and pressed his mouth firmly to Paula's breast. He had a reply for that. He opened his mouth still wider and began to scream.

"You hurt him," Paula protested.

"That's not being hurt," Miss Spong replied. "That's temper. That baby of yours has got a redheaded temper, Mrs. Andrews."

"But isn't it going to hurt him to cry like that?"

"It exercises his lungs. It's good for him to cry," Miss Spong replied calmly. "The best exercise in the world for babies is crying." Paula put her fingers in her ears. "You're nervous," Miss Spong remarked. "That comes from spending too much time talking to Mr. Andrews when you need quiet. I'll take the baby into the other room till he gets over his fit of temper."

Outside Paula could hear David's voice and the determined note of Miss Spong's answer. Very well Paula knew what was happening. David wanted to see her and Miss Spong wasn't going to let him. While Paula was fairly hungry for the sight of her husband, he couldn't come to her.

Presently Miss Spong came back. Anthony had gone to sleep.

"Hadn't you better let him sleep for a while?" quavered Paula.

"He's got to learn to eat," Miss Spong responded. They labored over him for ten minutes. Anthony's mind was made up. What he wanted now was sleep and not food. He won. There awakened in Paula a deep respect for this red scrap of a human thing whose will was stronger than that of the redoubtable nurse.

It went on like that all day. Every two hours Anthony was brought to Paula. Every two hours he opened his mouth, not to eat but to howl with indignation. Paula felt if this went on any longer something inside of her would break. She knew if it happened again she was going to scream and scream, and she had never screamed in her life.

"Miss Spong," she said, "you leave that baby with me and David and go out."

"O, very well," said Miss Spong, and went out, taking her efficiency with her.

"The trouble with the baby is," said Paula, "he doesn't like Miss Spong."

"Babies his age don't like people or dislike them," said David with that masculine logic which infuriates all women. Paula didn't argue.

"Pick him up," she commanded, "and bring him to me." David looked at Paula helplessly.

"I—I won't do it right. I've never had a baby that size in my arms before."

"Bring him to me," said Paula gently—there are two occasions when a woman's wishes can't be disputed. When she's a bride and when her baby's age is counted by hours.

David braced himself for a heroic effort. With solemn concentration he read the book which instructs parents about babies. He read how a baby should be carried. With resolute heroism he put one hand under Anthony's head and the other under the small of his back and brought him close to Paula. Then, as though the baby had been waiting for this for the two days of his life, Anthony opened his mouth. He ate. He ate manfully and with vigor.

"Call Miss Spong," said Paula quietly. For once she had triumphed over starched efficiency.

The Book, the Baby, and David.

It was after he had assisted Anthony to his first meal that David assumed his responsibilities of a father. He assumed them this way. When Miss Spong let him into Paula's room—and she needn't have acted as if she were Paula's maiden aunt opening the door on an unwanted caller—instead of looking at Anthony as if he were a miracle and at Paula as if she were the miracle maker, he took out a book and began to read.

"What are you reading?" Paula asked at last.

"I'm reading about Anthony," David answered. "I'm not going to be at the mercy of every yip he makes. Why, when he makes a noise I don't understand, my heart goes flop! Look at yesterday afternoon; we almost went crazy because Anthony cried and wouldn't eat. Such things can't go on." He looked at Paula sternly. She waited. "So," he continued with a note of triumph, "I'm simply committing that baby book of yours to heart. I've bought two more besides. I'm not going to approach that child from an emotional standpoint. I'm going to get on the outside of the best scientific knowledge on the subject of young children."

"Where did you get the books?" asked Paula faintly. "Did you buy them yourself?"

"Well," David admitted, "I didn't exactly. Not exactly. I sent—Miss Pritchard for them. You didn't expect I'd have time myself to go to a book store, but I had her attend to it." He immersed himself in the book that would teach him what to do for Anthony in every emergency.

That evening Miss Spong came in alone to Paula's room.

"Where's Mr. Andrews?" asked Paula.

"He's studying a book about babies—now isn't that like a man!" said Miss Spong. "The way to learn about babies is to get used to them first, and next to be with them. If he wants to learn, why doesn't he watch me bathe the baby and get a few practical lessons from me?" She stopped suddenly at the sound of David's footsteps.

A weight of responsibility seemed to weigh on him; he sat down heavily.

"What's the matter, Mr. Andrews?" asked Miss Spong briskly.

"There're so many things they can get," he groaned.

"Get?" said Miss Spong. "Who?"

"Diseases!" answered David. "Babies! Beans in their noses! Diphtheria. Have we a croup kettle in the house, Miss Spong?"

Miss Spong's eyes and Paula's met; they exchanged the look that all women know, which means, "Men! Can you beat them?"

Another installment of "My Son" will be printed in this section next Sunday.

The Last Word in Paris Fashions

STYLES BECOME AMERICANS.

By Mary Brush Williams.

[Chicago Tribune-Paris News Service.]

PARIS.—[Special Correspondence.]—They say that no chic woman pays any attention to the styles. I've chosen them in favor of what has personality and is becoming. I think that this season, if she wishes those two qualities in her costuming, she will have to pay attention to the mode, so entirely does it comprehend them.

Never have I seen fashions which contributed more grace and distinction to our long, slim American figures than those of the present. And never have I been fewer lines and fashions presented to choose from. It is as if the houses were trying to get on top of that terrific individuality, which is a part of the French character, and to act together. Surely they must have held conferences—all of the houses could not have hit accidentally so exactly the same predominating lines.

The other day I was going to tell of some of the leading features of the Premet collection, but came to the end of my allotted space before getting to generalizations. If we reviewed them here, the little exercise might be of value, because they are really the leading features of other houses as well. By repeating them we can tell whether they are a part of the ensemble of the fashions or an accident.

There is the spiral staircase movement, like the ascent to Washington monument and Eiffel tower, and always it begins with a downward dip, in its lowest story, which causes it to overlap itself in its way onward and upward toward the belt. The backs are flat, and yet not like a board, as in the season closing, but with a soft suggestion of subtly following the body, coming perhaps rather from the lovely pliability of the present materials rather than to a definite change in cut.

There is lace appliqued on crêpe de chine so closely that it looks as if it were glued there. The two look as if they were one unit. There is no space between material and lace. In fact, there is a definite movement for ornaments in lace and more solid, brilliantly tinted materials to look as if they were glued on.

I spoke of them in a former letter as looking like Christmas stickers, but at that time all I had seen were round, some being a good deal larger than others on the same dress. Now Premet comes along with squares of crêpe satin appliqued with the look of being pasted into checkerboard effects.

As to materials, this house, as well as many others, uses a great deal of broadcloth and duvetyn and baby lamb tissue. Panne velvet is wondrous popular for evening things. Premet has one of them in white. The colors used in appliques and embroideries are very wild, and not subdued pastel shades as in previous years. Crêpe satin and printed velvets are among the favorite materials of this house. And above all there is a distinct movement for having nothing on a dress but what rightfully belongs there, with a legitimate function, or the appearance of having one at least.

In the department of lines, one must mention a tendency toward Watteau panels to go down the back, or if not exactly that, in every dress falling under this general outline, at least a preference for fullness coming straight from the shoulders.

In years past the French have laughed at the American woman with her one skin of excellent fur round her neck. But now they are coming to it themselves, along with all of the inferior fur they are launching. It is very effective as they use it for collars, which are as a rule attached to the garment.

And as for those appliqued laces that my thoughts keep reverting to, sometimes they are dyed the same color as the material and sewed on so absolutely flat that it is as if the material itself had been done into hand made lace. There is a great delicacy and fineness to this kind of trimming. It carries the suggestion with it that the dress must have been expensive indeed.

Premet, you know, always specializes in tailleurs, and the first model is one on which the Americans are commenting they have done extremely well. Observe the spiral movement in full swing. The costume is in a beautiful shade of brown, woolen material—something not unlike kaska, and is trimmed in squirrel dyed a beautiful shade of brown, and used with the same lapping over movement that is a part of the spiral line. The fur goes round the bottom of the jacket in this matter, thus repeating the line which the skirt takes in cloth. There is a little brown leather belt completing the costume, and, as you can see, the fur edges collar and cuffs.

Again Premet, and this time showing the lovely use of folds as a trimming for the bodice. These plaits really close into a high collar, and when they open, as in the drawing, display what breaks on one as a surprise. They are all embroidered on their under side in pretty shades of reds and blues and greens. The dress is in very dark Havana brown, with a straight skirt that carries a beautifully fitted band, low round the hips, and dovetailing in with a perpendicular band similar to it going down either side of the front.

The chief is a dress of printed velvet in its skirt, and a straight bodice of dull blue silk, striped vertically with gold lace. There is snakeskin down the sides and gold lace for a belt. The costume affords a study in straight lines.

The fourth sketch shows a dress characteristic of the day, with its ruffle placed so low. The dress is of black velvet, straight and beltless, its only ornament being a diamond placed low on one hip. The ruffled skirt makes a pretty movement when the wearer walks.

Tailleur of brown kaska, with spiral movement on both skirt and jacket.

Dress of Havana brown, with folds on bodice that are embroidered on under side.

Dress with pointed velvet skirt, bodice of dull blue silk, striped with gold lace.

Dress of black velvet, with deep ruffle on lower part of cylinder silhouette.

Marital Reefs

Just in Time.

A few years after our marriage when I was homemaker and housekeeper for my two babies and my husband, I began to feel that my numerous cares were more than other wives bore. Accordingly, at night when my husband came in I began relating all my worries of the day. I kept this up for over a year and I failed to connect it with the fact that my husband spent more evenings away from home; was not prompt in coming to dinner, and never seemed to come in with his old gladsome smile.

Then one day I woke up. A business associate said to me, "Well, I am glad to see that Charles pulled through his business crisis. You must have been making it easy for him at home, so that he could give it his entire attention."

Then I realized that out of the business of Charles' love for me he had never mentioned the circle he was under and had borne patiently with my fussing about my household cares.

Why don't wives realize that a man does not come home to tell them that this deal did not go through, or that business man failed to take his order, or all the petty details he has to handle in a day?

Now I share only real worries with my husband. C. B.

He Blames Separation.

We started out in Washington, D. C., and were married without telling her people. That was the first mistake.

Then came the Christmas holidays and I was unable to leave my work, so sent my wife home alone. That was the big mistake.

No sooner had she arrived at her home than she began to beg me to give up my position in Washington and go to her home and get something there. I finally did and then made the mistake so many people make—went to live with her parents.

Today she is in Indiana and I am in Chicago. Our happiness is done. My advice to newlyweds is: "Stay away from relatives and above all keep your wife—or husband—where you can always see her—or him.

Do you look Too old to succeed?

Gray hair denotes advancing age. Age is a handicap, and we all know the advantage of a youthful appearance.

Don't stay gray! Look young, vigorous! When your hair turns gray, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur will darken it.

Either prepare the recipe at home or get from any drug store, a bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, which is merely the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients. Thousands of men and women recommend this ready-to-use preparation, because it darkens the hair perfectly, and besides, no one can tell, because it darkens so naturally and evenly.

You moisten a sponge or soft brush with it, drawing this through the hair, taking a few strands at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears. After another application or two its natural color is restored, and you appear years younger.

FALLING HAIR

DANDRUFF, itching scalp and falling hair are signs of an unhealthy scalp. Sergeant's Mange Medicine makes the scalp healthy. Then it will grow healthy luxuriant hair. Sergeant's is a real scalp medicine—standard for 50 years. Nothing else approaches Sergeant's for actual results. Its sulphuretted pine and other natural oils kill dandruff germs and fertilize the hair roots, stop falling hair and cause the hair to grow thick and fast all over the head. Results are almost immediate. Barbers apply Sergeant's. A large bottle is only $1 and at drug stores and toilet counters.

Beautiful mahogany cabinets, with hand carved posts, and the woodwork polished and rubbed down until it is the last word in quality.

Stop! Look! Rub Your Eyes!

Think of it—"$549,000 worth of nationally known phonographs"—"At less than 50 cents on the dollar." Never such a sale—never such an opportunity offered by any single store in the history of the phonograph industry.

Rothschild's have just secured more than half a million dollars' worth of some of the world's finest phonographs. These will go on sale to the public at 8:30 Monday morning.

These are nationally advertised phonographs, made by one of the largest manufacturers in the United States. They are among the highest priced phonographs this maker produced, but because he is temporarily suffering from overproduction—too many machines—he sold them to us for extra quick disposal.

They have been slightly disguised so that they would not be too quickly recognized, but you can see by the pictures what wonderful machines they are. We had to agree not to let the name or trademark appear in this advertisement or on the phonographs, but you have our word for it that every single one of them is first quality, in perfect condition, and will look as handsome, play as sweetly, and give as many years of enjoyment as if the world-known trademark were stamped all over it.

MEN'S FASHIONS

SELECTING A WARDROBE FOR FALL AND WINTER

This department appears every day in the Daily Tribune.

BY A. T. GALLICO.

This department will be glad to answer any questions regarding men's fashions and the correct things to wear on different occasions. Address communications to A. T. Gallico, The Tribune, Chicago. Inclose stamped addressed envelope for personal reply.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—The well dressed man, after a summer at the seashore or the mountains, or across the ocean, is once more to be caught strolling on the avenue, dropping in and out of fashionable metropolitan hotels, or going to and from business offices. He has returned in a full glory of new fall clothes, and is serving as a model to other men less sartorially inventive. We do not all set styles, but we can all imitate and take our cue from pioneers who know what they like, and dare to wear it.

Not that there are any startlingly revolutionary notes in the fashions set this autumn. So far we have seen no scarlet breeches, pink derbies, or calico shirts. Even the most adventurous of the male sex preserve a certain conservatism and an aversion to radical changes in their attire. The change from season to season and from year to year is so slight that a member of the other sex, used as she is to sudden and constant changes in the fashion of her clothes, would scarcely credit man with anything different in his costume. Whether one's lapel is half peaked or plain notched would not appeal to the average citizen as a vital point of difference, yet this is one of the things to look for as a possible change, although not a necessary one.

We have said it before, but it will bear repetition—the fact that men's styles are to a great extent the result of a cycle. We have seen this in the return to popularity of the double breasted straight across waistcoat, of the return this fall of padded shoulders. It is as true of fashion as of chemistry that there is nothing new in the world. And it is the recognized setters of current men's styles who are responsible for the coming and going of the various tricks of fashion.

From a survey so far of the well groomed man of autumn, we have drawn a few conclusions that may be of help or interest to the man who is selecting a wardrobe for fall and winter. To begin with the suit, there is a tendency to wide shoulders and slim hip line that we went into in more detail in a recent article. That style is established and not to be ignored. The narrow shouldered man is not in style, and if not naturally of husky build may have recourse to padding in the coats, even as did the fashionable man of some years back.

Materials for lounge suits are running largely to cheviots and unfinished worsteds, with an emphasis upon mixtures and a decided popularity for the plain colors with line stripes set well apart. There are only a few plaids and checks. Blues and grays lead the day in color, with certain shades of brown and the various lovat shades holding their own. Even light gray is frequently seen these autumn days, although the general tendency with the fading of summer is towards darker colors.

We saw a smart member of the younger set the other day decorating 5th avenue with a light gray cheviot suit, white shirt, bright orange four in hand, and orange bordered handkerchief. It seems that the well dressed man is not going into mourning for summer this year.

Now and then we have hinted at or discussed the vogue among the smart dressers of the mixed suit for semi-formal or lounge wear. That is, the wearing of a dark sack coat and odd trousers. This interesting costume, which is one way of getting around the monotony of men's suits, is still in favor with those men who were first responsible for it. Jackets are of dark gray or black, with trousers of stripes or checks or plain light gray. Blue jackets have been seen, with trousers of a lighter grayish blue. The waistcoat is usually of the same material as the coat. In the case of the mixed suits, it is better to have the waistcoat uniform with the coat than to use one of the fancy ones that are in vogue with plain suits, to avoid too motley an effect. The fancy waistcoat with a simple dark suit is recommended as good style and the opening to an attractive combination.

The most important note about shirts is that white is running ahead of all else. White is bound to be a favorite, because it is becoming to every one, and is the safest foundation for a cravat. The most popular forms of the white shirt are English broadcloth and the oxford weave. The latter are seen more with the collar that does not button down than the button down variety. This, of course, refers to the soft collar variety only. The best dressed business men are all sticking to the stiff white collar with white or colored shirts.

Every kind of colored shirt is acceptable, provided they remain within the borders of conservatism and good taste. Blue has the most followers, with tan and gray doing well. Figured shirtings are shown by many exclusive houses, but are not good unless they are made of high grade material; otherwise, they will fade at the first laundering and be useless.

As for hats, we have noticed quite a few of those light weight felts with unrolled brims, which may be turned up and down to suit the wearer. The smartest way is straight all the way round, with the hat worn at a tilt, or with the front of the brim slightly turned down. This hat is most popular in a light gray, with a black band. When the brim is turned down, it becomes rather a negligee hat, and should not be worn thus when the desired effect is at all formal.

We have observed a number of topcoats with a large overcheck or plaid. Another point which will bear repeating is that this type should be avoided by the extremely short man, also by the man built on unusually large proportions. In the former case the effect is to make the figure too squatty, while in the latter it is to attract undue attention to the size of the figure. The wise large man dresses in dark, plain clothes which do not hit the eye.

Varied Activities of Women.

A studio where canaries are taught singing is the unique venture conducted by Mrs. Edward Smering of Atlanta, Ga., where she has a bird hospital.

The American flag which is now displayed alongside of the desk of President Coolidge was presented to him by Mrs. Frank W. Stearns of Boston, who observed during a recent visit to the White House that the office of the President was without a national emblem.

Miss Ivah Raines of Topeka, Kan., daughter of Judge Oscar Raines, has just passed the necessary examinations, been admitted to the bar and taken into her father's firm. The disinclination of her brother to be a lawyer suggested the choice of a profession to Miss Raines.

Inspired by the success of her brother, Alfred Johnson, who in one year piloted Morvich and Exterminator to victory, she quit her job as typist and turfed jockey and won races at the recent Interstate fair at Spokane, Wash.

Miss Julia Rockord, of Baltimore, Md., is the pioneer of a new field of specialized work. She has been engaged by the state of Illinois to preserve the battle flags of Illinois regiments which served in the Black Hawk war, in which Abraham Lincoln was a captain; the Mexican war, the civil war, the Spanish-American war, and the world war.

Mrs. Anna Vanalike, who went to Santa Monica, twelve years ago, suffering from tuberculosis, recently celebrated her sixty-third birthday by swimming ten miles in the ocean. After being in the water over nine hours she sang "The Star Spangled Banner," to prove she was not exhausted.

PROLOGUE.

The Potters have lured their patient flivver into the wild mountains of Switzerland, and now they are beginning to regret . . . the Guide Tyride is full of grim warnings . . . every automobile road is sprinkled profusely with "Dr" (Dangereuse) . . . every one from whom they seek information has a new and blood curdling tale to tell of passes so high that chamois die of exhaustion trying to cross them, of roads infested with glaciers and avalanches and altitudes and barometric pressures . . . Ma is scared to death . . . Pa, despite the superior virility of his masculinity, is pale behind the ears . . . the attitude of Bill and Mamie is far from reassuring . . . "Bring your old passes," says Bill. "Where is this here now Matterhorn?"

SCENE I.

From Locarno to Bellanzona is a short run through a delightful valley carpeted with wild flowers . . . Swiss chalets begin to appear, although the architecture is still Italian by a big majority . . . the road climbs slowly to Biasca, following an ice cold river into which constantly increasing numbers of waterfalls leap from incredible heights . . . up and up goes the road, playing leap-frog with the railroad which dives in and out of the mountains practicing for its big plunge through St. Gothard tunnel.

MA (nervously):

Are we nearly over? Do you think we'll make it? What'll happen if the car stops? Where are we? Let's go back.

BILL (gaily):

Gosh, we haven't started up yet . . . this is Airolo—here's where we really begin to go up.

MA: We're not going much higher than this, are we?

BILL:

Do you see those mountains up there in front with the snow on them? That's where we go over.

MA (panicky):

We'll never get there—I know it.

(Road suddenly decides to stop fooling around and starts straight up the mountain . . . flivver gasps with astonishment and begins to labor . . . road turns gally and chases its tail up the mountain in an amazing series of dizzy leaps . . . the flivver coughs and wheezes and then with dogged determination claws and scratches up after it . . . Ma and Mamie almost fall backwards out of the car as the valley shrinks until the houses are mere toys in the blue haze below.)

MA (hysterically):

O, I hear a car coming . . . what'll we do? What'll we do?

PA (sarcastically):

We'll just drive off the road and let them go by, of course. (Leaning over edge of car and gazing into valley.) It can't be more than a mile down there.

(The poste express appears high above them, coming down the switchbacks with gay abandon . . . the swiftly moving cloud of white dust is rushing down on the Potters like a doom . . . as it approaches it grows larger and its speed increases tremendously . . . the driver weaves in his seat and shouts a mad Swiss song with the most unbecoming gayety . . . he should worry, for he is the poste, and the poste is entitled to take the inside of the road.)

BILL (shouting):

Look, the darn fool is coming right at us . . . why doesn't he keep to the right?

PA (jumping up and waving his arms frantically):

Hey, you! YOU!

(Swiss driver continues Swiss movement with Swiss nonchalance.)

MAMIE (suddenly remembering):

Bill, you've got to take the outside! That's the poste.

(Bill pulls protesting Lizzie over to the extreme edge, where she teeters dizzily as poste express thunders by, shaking the mountain . . . the wind nearly blows the Potters into the valley.)

MA (weakly):

Stop, I'm going to faint.

BILL (desperately):

If I stop, we'll never get started again.

(Cold air blowing down from the glacier partly revives Ma . . . steam from boiling radiator envelops panting Lizzie . . . a brief stretch of almost level road leads past a little chalet where Bill stops and fills radiator with ice water from mountain stream.)

MAMIE:

I wish you'd look at where those people built that house. They must be tired of life.

(Potters look and gasp . . . balanced delicately some thousands of feet directly over the little chalet are 187,000 tons of stone and ice . . . but perhaps Mr. and Mrs. Swiss and the little Swisses have never even noticed them yet . . . "One of these days it'll all fall right on top of them," says Ma Potter, who is nothing if not thorough . . . but why all, in the name of humanity? One ton would be enough.)

BILL (under way again):

Here we go over the top. (Suddenly) Do you see that black speck against the snow, way up there? That must be our road. That's a car coming over.

MA: My ears are beginning to feel funny.

PA: You're probably talking too much . . . the air is thin up here; I wouldn't waste it.

(The ensuing discussion lasts considerable time in spite of the scarcity of oxygen . . . radiator now boils dry every few hundred yards . . . snow appears first in little patches and then huge drifts . . . road climbs steadily . . . tremendous waterfalls leap from living glaciers . . . car steams and pants through huge drifts of snow piled high on both sides of the road . . . suddenly house appears beside miniature lake . . . it is the Hospice of St. Gothard . . . the Potters are on top of the pass . . . some seven thousand feet high . . . flivver staggers up to door and stops with a despairing wheeze . . . Potters wobble out and collapse into chairs . . . well, well—this will be something to tell the folks back home . . . just wait until the trusty camera can be unlashed and the glaciers posed becomingly.)

SCENE II.—ANABELLE MAC LUCKIE RECEIVES A LETTER FROM BILL POTTER.

. . . and then we had lunch on top of the mountain and the tables were filled with people talking all the languages you ever heard. They seem to talk everything in Switzerland but Swiss . . . French, English, German, Dutch, and Italian. I've learned a lot about languages. In French you say Une Canette if you want a big Beer, and Un Bock if you want a little one. In Italian you say Una Birra. In Switzerland you speak either French, Italian, or German. You'll be surprised to see how much I've learned when I get back.

I was going to bring you a St. Bernard puppy. Fellow here at St. Gothard hospice had some, but they were too young. They looked just like bear cubs. But the most interesting thing we saw on the mountain was a lot of Swiss soldiers practicing the goose step. It looks plumb nuts, if you ask me.

I wish you could have been with us coming down from the top of that mountain. Every time we saw a valley down below us we said, "That's the bottom," but every time we got down there we saw another valley twice as far down. And this kept up all afternoon. I had to have the engine in gear and brace myself on the brake and reverse pedals all afternoon. Gee, it was fierce, but it was thrilling, believe me. I wanted Pa to go over the Furka and the Grimsel passes, too. The Furka is a thousand feet higher than the St. Gothard, but Ma talked him out of it. So instead of that we went to Lucerne, where it was all cluttered up with swells giving their clothes an airing, and Ma and Mamie had a perfectly miserable time because they couldn't change as fast as some of the other women. But anyway we saw the Lion of Lucerne monument. I am sending you a postcard picture of it. And we saw the Dance of Death bridge and the Chapel bridge, two funny little bridges going across the river kitty-corners. They're relics of something or other, but we didn't have time to look it up.

After we left Lucerne we drove up through Aarau and then to Bale, which they also spell Basel and Basle. These birds over here don't seem to be able to make up their minds. Just like in Italy. We'd be looking for Florence and they would be calling it Firenze. And they call Venice Venitzia. You would think they would know the names of their own towns, but they don't seem to.

From here we've got to go through France and Belgium before we can get into Holland. But there aren't any distances over here. We were clear through Switzerland before we knew it, and if I hadn't slammed on the brakes we would have coasted over into Belgium some place. Anyway I know all about Switzerland now. These yodelers are all bunk. We didn't see a single one of them. And we didn't see any Swiss cheese factories, and no eagles and no costumes. But we sure did see mountains. The whole darn country is standing right up on edge. No wonder the Swiss don't have any wars. The enemy would get so tired climbing they wouldn't have any pep left to fight.

How's tricks? Why don't you write to a fellow? This is the third letter I've sent you, and not a peep out of you. Are you mad? If so, why? Come on, kick in with a nice letter and tell me a lot of pretty lies. Atta bebby. As ever, only more so—Bill.

(And that's that—until next Sunday.)

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—The measure of a man is tested by his manner of facing a calamity.

Equally true it is of women!

In the face of the catastrophe that has overwhelmed Japan, to speak of a calamity in connection with a single individual may seem a wholly irrelevant application of the word; particularly when applied to so comparatively petty an item as the accumulation of flesh.

"A calamity it was, nevertheless," asserts Mrs. H. E., "and I dare any married woman who loves her husband to call it by any other name."

"There I was," she recited, "sitting at a table with Millie, who had come in from the country to shop with me. And in came the man I would have trusted all over the world with a creature who, mad as I was, I had to confess looked like a magazine cover.

When Comparisons Are Odious.

"Another look made me heartsick to the core. And to heap calamity upon calamity, I viewed myself in the mirror at my right, gave the girl another once over, and the comparison was odious. Fortunately my husband's back was toward me and I made an exit, not hasty, for my power of locomotion had gone paralyzed.

"I'm not much given to dramatics. I would do anything to avoid a scene," she continued. "I made up my mind I would die rather than say a word to my husband.

"Twice that week he telephoned around 6 o'clock the old story about being detained by business.

Mirror Tells Sad Tale.

"Before the second alibi came in I had been to see my dressmaker, who exclaimed: 'My, you used to be able to get into our model dresses. Look at your measurements now.'

"I looked. Waist 36 inches. Hips 42. Bust 40. I don't know if there was anything else registered against me. I hadn't the heart to look.

"'You used to have such a lovely figure,' she salted the wound. Then for extra good measure, in case I did not get the implication the first time, she said in her brutally frank and broken English: 'Better be careful or you'll be losing that generous hue band of yours.'

"I went home full of resentment, but toward no one but myself. I knew I was getting shapeless. And I was reminded of it from time to time. But there are folk who require the threat of calamity to wake them up. I'm one of them.

Hears Him the First Time.

"Anyway, I woke up twenty-five pounds less than when I went to sleep on my job. And I don't have to be coaxed to go anywhere with my darling now. No, sir, I hear him the first time, and have my hat on ready to step out before he has decided where we shall go.

"When a woman runs into the third angle of her triangle, I say, let her cast her first ugly look at the girl in her own mirror. I know that's where she'll find the reason.

"Piling up flesh isn't the worst thing that accumulation does to you, and I know it. It makes you fat from the brows up. And that's where the trouble begins."

"How did you crawl out from under the load?" I asked her.

She gave me her recipe. She wrote out for me the diet she followed, which is simple and tasty enough to be viewed as a light penance for past sins.

"I knew more about foods than I did about exercise. But I did know one good exercise, and I did it exclusively. I had a woolen bathing suit, you see, and a heavy wool sweater. Twice a day I got into this costume and performed that one movement twenty-five times, until I had worked up a good perspiration, and then under the shower I went. At first I was frightfully stiff, but that vision of my beloved, smiling into another's eyes, kept my back from breaking under the strain. Anyway, I think we underestimate the burden that may be applied to a back; we fat ones, any way, who coddle ourselves all out of shape.

This Is What She Did.

The exercise she did is an excellent one, but I would caution the average woman who wishes to follow the system to begin with ten times at each workout. Gradually increase. The woolen clothing is advised as the real value of an exercise, after all, is to work up perspiration to be followed by a shower.

You may know the exercise. Stand with feet about eighteen inches apart, body erect; raise arms overhead; bend trunk forward as you swing arms downward between legs; raise trunk and bend backward at waist, swinging arms up over head again. Next time you come down turn waist and swing arms down to outside of right leg; back up and then down to outside of left leg, and back to first position again. Just as though you were chopping wood!

Ten repetitions involve thirty movements—which is pretty stiff for a beginner—for, of course, all women who wish to reduce haven't the impetus of an "escaping mate." I most heartily recommend the exercise as one of the best single ones that may be done for waist and hips particularly. And perhaps it is simpler for the average woman to be considered enough till tomorrow. The two-a-day performance, as they say in vaudeville, is recommended.

The diet followed by my confidante varied little from week to week during the entire course from the menus outlined in the first seven days and given below:

Beauty Answers

D. S. KERR: I WOULD NOT advise a strenuous diet at your tender age, but you may exercise, and should to attain more perfect symmetry. I have some excellent exercises for the reduction and waist. If you are eating much candy, forego that. Also go lightly on white bread, as overconsumption of this causes much unnecessary and not wholesome flesh on young frames. Eat more plentifully of fresh vegetables and salads at noonday and evening meals. Don't fill up on bread and rolls. Don't eat between meals at all.

ANXIOUS: TO FIVE FEET TWO inches and 16 years are allotted about 116 pounds. So you are just about all right, aren't you?

BROWNIE: YOU COULD STAND about fifteen pounds. If you will be good enough to send me a. a. e., I'll be glad to inclose in it a pamphlet telling you just what to do and what to eat to round you out more becomingly.

What's your beauty ill? Too fat? Too thin? Sky on hair? Oily hair oily skin, freckles, pimples, or big kneads? Flat footed or flat footed? Write to me. I have a tonic, a diet, or a set of exercises for what ails you, and you're welcome to them and to all the advice I can give you. If you wish a personal reply, send a stamped addressed envelope. Address Antoinette Donnelly, The Tribune, Chicago.

ow to Be Happy Though Married

by Doris Blake

THE problem of sex unreciprocity has important bearings upon the marriage question for both sexes.

It is difficult to discuss.

But that makes it none the less vital in an attempt to help marriage solve its problems.

The answers supplied the Rockefeller foundation on the questionnaire sent by its bureau of social hygiene to 2-- large women throughout the country in an attempt to get at the reasons for so much marital discord prove beyond measure of doubt that the physical aspect of marriage cannot be underrated or ignored.

Ask Any Judge.

Almost any divorce judge will testify from his single judiciary experience that it is at the bottom of half, at least, of the charges entered under incompatibility.

Ask any medical person of experience and he will agree that sex life plays a complex, important part in the health and happiness of married life.

What is the part of woman in the physical aspect of marriage?

Must it be the wife's concern to sacrifice her own wishes from a sense of love and duty toward her husband?

Is the ascription of "natural coldness" to women as a sex altogether fair?

Or is it a presupposition of the male mind, based upon his intense solicitude for woman's purity and modesty?

Ages Old in Argument.

The "eternal frigidity" of woman has been the subject of chapter upon chapter. Is it a prime source of domestic trouble, mental incompatibility, divorce, and the lax conduct of a large number of married men?

The love rights of women have been in argument throughout the history of civilization. The problem still exists today, it is apparent. Since I began this series, I have been the recipient of confidences sometimes startling, sometimes illuminating, and often discouraging because of the necessarily meager equipment given one individual to wrestle with the problems involved in the intimate relationship of marriage.

This one of the "cold and unresponsive woman" has been submitted to me for solution a number of times.

I have been accused of "shooting high and to the right and off the target" until, as one husband puts it, he "had to become articulate."

From a Man's Point of View.

So, he prefaces a complaint, a manly and a fair one, perhaps from a male point of view.

"This is an honest statement"—to quote him—"of a situation that prevails in thousands of homes, and some day you may have a chance to tell a bunch of girls a few things they need to know. I could name a half dozen just such homes right now. When you bat your best friend over the head for the good of his soul, he is apt to tell you the exasperating circumstances.

"The trouble, the big trouble, with marriage in the educated middle class is sex," he continues. "Now, steady—don't duck. Marriage to the women in my crowd seems to mean a lot of affection for the husband, the proper kind of home, ditto car, the smart number of children—God love them—in half sox on the country club lawn, the best books and a lot of them straight shooting as regards the seventh commandment, and that is about all. And it is not enough.

Married for Love.

"We married our girls because we loved them; because we hoped there would be some children who look exactly like their mothers; because we wanted to spend the rest of our lives in their company, and because we were men and they were attractive women. But we assumed that a normal married life would have a thread of color in it. The loom has turned out a fine piece of goods for most of us, no knots or broken threads, as comfortable and serviceable and endurable as a high grade tweed, but without a thread brighter than a fireside brown. A fine piece of goods and I appreciate it—but when the weaver has to her hand threads of every color, why not use a few?

"Despite a New England ancestry, I look upon the sex side of married life as something normal, natural, and unembarrassing; and on the pleasure to be derived thereby as a concomitant of a normal marriage. I know it makes for a solidity of feeling in the home.

Is There an Answer?

"How does the average educated young wife look at it? When she does submit, she does just that and with only a dignified aquiescence. We men are not sybarites. We acknowledge our well managed homes and our superlatively cared for children. We do not expect nor want married life to be a poem of passion—God forbid!

"She—still the young wife—makes herself as desirable as possible, and then wishes to sidestep any masculine reaction. Not only wishes to, but does—not unpleasantly but efficaciously; a tremendous drop in temperature: an almost cataclysmic onrush of sleepiness, a dutiful good night kiss, a remark about taking in the ice card, and that, again, is all.

"Is there an answer? We do not know of one.

"Of course, there are always 'women.' But not for us. Most of us have memories of shameful earlier experiences which taught us the futility of such affairs. We are too smart for that, as well as too fastidious. Once in a while we will meet a brother in the foyer of a hotel in a distant city with a bit of 'fluff.' We pass each other up, and do not recognize the incident then or afterwards. We know from what that situation has been derived. Sometimes our crowd will contain a much more dangerous type for a season—educated and acceptable and with a flaire for men. Some one is sure to think that is the answer, but when it gets looking dangerous, a couple of the boys take the slipping member into the deserted locker room and pound some sense into him, for which he is grateful ever after, though not at the time.

Want to Play Straight.

"The point is this," continues the spokesman for his party. "We love our wives and we want them and we don't get them except in the most unsatisfying manner. We believe in playing straight cards and the marriage vows just as straight. We want no memories of primrose excursions to bar us from the women we love, to say nothing of endangering the good, solid American homes and the clean records we are making for ourselves and our children and our children's children.

"But we are men. And 'it is not good for a man to be alone.' In the way we are discussing a lot of us are alone, and as far as we can see will be from now on.

"We have the best wives in the world and the finest kids, of course. We have good homes and a fairish amount of money for the pleasant extras. The reason we have these nice things is because we can go out and take them away from the tight fisted world—because we are men. Why penalize us for the same fact? Do any of you women want weak, feminish husbands who cannot get you what you want? No, you don't.

"It isn't how to be happy though married, Doris. It's how to be a whole lot happier though married."

"You tell 'em," he concludes, with the signature "Thirty."

Just to Remind You.

Before I attempt to "tell 'em," I would like to remind men that what they view with dismay in women is something of their own doing. The so-called "coldness" is the result of an elaborate process of training, begun centuries ago, when man first began to subjugate the actions and the feelings of women, supposedly for her benefit but in reality for his own.

There is no evidence to prove that in the beginning there was any natural disparity in the sex instinct. Man created the difference, and in great measure by his open disapproval of any manifestation of sex emotion in women.

The natural need of women for sexual love and maternity is unquestioned. They have simply acquired the duplicity necessary to play the part imposed upon them, and in the learning their natural reactions have become paralyzed.

Not much over a half century ago we find Acton, who was then regarded as the chief English authority on sex matters, declaring that "happily for society" the supposition that women possess sexual feelings could be put aside as "a vile aspersion." Another medical authority of the same period stated in regard to the utmost simple physical sign of healthy sex emotion that it "only happens in lascivious women."

According to Opinion.

In the matter of courtship even today a woman governs her emotions according to the opinion of the dominating masculine ideal of women.

Unless her instincts are perverted, woman is not cold; nor does she desire to appear cold or to be cold. The acquired quality, which in some women may tend to produce a seeming coldness, has been developed to meet the masculine ideal of sex morality. A frank recognition of the part men have played in training her to an unnatural rôle is a necessary first step toward "how to be happier though married."

Perhaps the new order of things—the new and saner attitude toward the primary facts of life in the two sexes—may help to clear the divorce records of charges of infidelity ascribed to the coldness of the spouse.

I wonder! At the risk of appearing a bit cynical, which I do not believe I am, I wonder if the instinct of the male which we have familiarized as "polygamous" would become as extinct as the dodo if wives operated wholesalely on the busines of reciprocity.

There is physiological knowledge about women which not all men take the trouble to understand, and this ignorance is responsible for much discord and conflict and misery. There are times when woman is normally not responsive, and again when her creative impulse rises and reaches its maximum. The value of this knowledge is obvious to me. Physicians are always available to impart it.

Doris Blake's Answers to Love Problems

This department appears every day in the Daily Tribune.

Boy Does Usually.

"Dear Miss Blake: Would you please tell me who should write first. A dear friend of mine is away, and asked me to write. Is it proper for the girl or the boy to write first? DOUBTFUL."

The boy usually does write first and the girl answers. However, if you were away, it would be quite within the bounds for you to drop a note or card.

Have you a problem you want to watch and need the comment of a friend? Write to Doris Blake, care The Tribune, Chicago. Inclose a stamped, addressed envelope. Please write briefly. A typed envelope will help.

Can't Forget Him.

"Dear Miss Blake: Kindly give me your advice about the following.

"Two years ago I met a young man who showed much admiration for me. We went out frequently for quite a while. He then gave me a gift, which displeased his sister-in-law, who tried her utmost to separate us. After that he left me without an explanation, which has been a puzzle to me to this day.

"I have many admirers, but I can never forget him. What shall I do?

"ANXIOUS."

I wonder if the sister-in-law might not have got in some more black hand work. I think if I were you, I should aim to get in touch with the man and see if some explanation would not clear up the trouble.

A FRIEND

by Sally Joy

This department appears every day in the Daily Tribune.

RIGHT now our files show a rare opportunity to do a wholesale good in one of the easiest ways imaginable. If there is anything we like to think of as an occasion for happiness, it is the advent of a new life in the world, yet our files at the present moment are filled with cases where the expected arrival of a baby is falling with crushing force upon families whose savings have been exhausted by illness or unemployment, whose wage leaves no margin above current living expenses.

When we think of the infant clothing, cribs, baby carriages, and the like which are being outgrown and discarded every day in Chicago before they have lost all usefulness, is there any reason why we should allow this condition to exist another day?

Where they are at present, these articles only take up room, and all too often are thrown out and lost to every one at the next housecleaning or when moving.

If you have any of them, think how much better it would be were these articles to go as a veritable godsend to some family or mother in despair for lack of ability to welcome the new comer.

Then let us know that you will help. Let's make this a cleanup week on articles of this sort, so that for a time so far as outfitting the babies is concerned their coming will be an occasion of unalloyed joy in all the anxious homes!

Old and Helpless.

"I come to you in the hope that you will help us a little. I am an old woman unable to work and my husband is an invalid in a wheel chair. We need clothing. I have no winter coat. We would be so thankful for anything. Miss Brown. My husband wears size 43 and I wear size 44 or 46. I can make things over. We need warm bed clothing, too. We live downstairs and it is cold and damp. We will thank you a thousand times for any assistance given us. Mrs S."

I look for a prompt and generous response to this appeal by the elderly couple.

Away and Lonely.

"Could your paper be the means of getting a radio set for me? It is lonely here, and when I read of programs broadcasted I wish I had a set. The doctor says I am to stay here for some time. I surely get lonely.

Wouldn't it be splendid if there were an available radio set which could be given or lent to this patient during his convalescence?

by Sally Joy Brown

I want to be the medium through which the friend in need and the friend in need may be brought together. It may be you have some discarded article which is but an eyesore to you, but which would make some one less fortunate very happy and you would gladly give it to them if you knew of it. Please do not send articles to The Tribune, but write for the address of the applicant and send direct.

I trust this request in behalf of the crippled young man will meet with the response it deserves.

Offers Suit to Girl.

"I have been scanning your columns for several days for some one I thought could wear an orchid wool suit I have to give. I'm small—the skirt is only 21 inches long. L. M."

Wonderful Adventures of the Dog Club

The Gravel-Pitters Have a Fire.

By Raymond Kelly.

THE Gravel-pitters were all standing around admiring the new fire axes and the beautiful brass fire extinguisher, which had been presented to the club. The axes had been arranged to hang with their handles crossing above the fireplace, while the fire extinguisher hung just beneath them. The whole thing made a wonderful display, and every Gravel-pitter was as proud as a puppy who has just bitten his first tramp.

"Gee," said Ginger, the fox terrier, "I can hardy wait for the place to catch fire. One of my grandfathers was born at a fire engine house, and even when he got too fat to follow after the hook and ladder company, he always ran out in front of the station and barked until they were out of sight. So you see it's in my blood to love a good fire. I prefer a fire to a parade any day."

"You'd make a great hero, you would," said Toodles, the poodle. "What do you know about fires? I've had experience, I have. I used to jump right through a blazing hoop, didn't I, Wiggler?"

But before Wiggler could answer, there came a great puff from the fireplace, and the whole place was filled with smoke so thick that it was almost blinding. Then there certainly was real excitement. Toodles grabbed a mat to drag it from the cave, but was so flustered that he forgot himself, and chewed it up just as though it belonged to somebody else, while Ginger carried out a pail of water, and set it down carefully without spilling a drop.

Carlo, the St. Bernard, and Granger, the collie, took hold of the fire axes, but could not use them, because the handles had been nailed into the bricks of the fireplace to keep them from falling and hurting somebody.

But Wiggler, the monkey, was the real hero. He grabbed that fire extinguisher off its hook, and turned it on everything and everybody. Everything, that is, except the fire. But that made no difference because the fire was all in the fireplace anyhow, and couldn't do any harm, because it could not get out.

By and by, when the Gravel-pitters had been out in the pit awhile, telling each other how brave they were, the smoke cleared up so they could go into the cave again. Then Wolf, the police dog, looked up the chimney, and saw something was on top of it. So all the Gravel-pit pups went up on top to see what it was.

And what do you think? Why, an old white horse had been lying on the ground so that he covered the chimney hole. The Gravel-pitters led him away, and they put up a sign which read:

This hole isn't one.
It's our chimney. Horses and other person please keep off.

Jane and Fred had a quarrel on the way to school, and Fred continued hostilities in the schoolroom by making ugly faces at Jane when the teacher's back was turned.

Finally Jane rose in her wrath and said, "Teacher, make Fred see me with his own face." E. L. R.

Billy Brad had been cautioned not to hit or fight any of his little playmates and one day he had a little boy over to play and invited him into the house.

Jimmie, the little boy, had Billy up on the couch and was hitting him right and left when Billy called me.

"Auntie," he said, "I guess I'll have to lick my guest." V. F.

I took my daughter to the circus. As we were walking into the big tent, a man selling gorgeous balloons and paper canaries called out in coaxing circus tones, "Buy one for the little girlie, mister, buy one. She wants one, O, how she wants one!"

"Daddy, dear," whispered Betty, wonderingly, "how does he know?" K. D. B.

The family on either side of Jimmie is composed of girls, and Jimmie, being a regular boy, often bemoans the fact that there are no boys close to him.

One day a woman and her two sons came to visit one of these families, and Jimmie, delighted, went to his mother and told her the good news in this manner: "Thank goodness, their company is girlless." M. O.

It was Kenneth's first day at school. When all the children were seated he raised his hand and said: "I can spell cat and can count to seven and write my own name, so you won't have to bother to teach me much." B. R.

At a children's party Charles stopped reciting a piece at the end of the first verse.

Dan, his brother, drawled slowly, "go on Charles, there are three more layers to that piece." A. O. S.

Imogen had lived in the country and had never been to a party. When Robert, her city cousin, was visiting at her home he was telling about a party.

"What is a party like?" asked Imogen.

"O," explained Robert, painstakingly, "it's a place where you go in your best clothes and use about all of your manners." B. R.

Patterns by Clotilde

1251—Woman's and misses' camisole slip. Sizes 16 years and 36 to 44 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 2¼ yards of 36, 32, 38, or 40 inch material, with 3 yards of hemstitching and 2½ yards of ribbon.

1348—Woman's and misses' long bloomers. Sizes 24, 28, 32, and 36 inches waist measure. Size 28 requires 2⅝ yards of 40 inch material.

1303—Stout woman's corset cover. Sizes 36 to 50 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires ⅞ yard of 36 inch material.

How to Use the Patterns.

STOUT figures require a close fitting cover to hold the figures well in place and pattern No. 1303 will be found right for the purpose. A reasonably heavy muslin will be best, and if you wish to take real comfort in it, be sure to shrink the cloth thoroughly before cutting.

It buttons down the front and there are no underarm seams—but a seam each side of the front and back—and it fits smoothly under the arms. The best seam for lingerie is the felled one. Baste and stitch the seams, then trim off one edge on each, being sure to leave a safe margin; then hem the other edge down over the trimmed one. Have the seams an even width when finished—say, one-eighth of an inch—and do the hemming by hand.

The neck and armholes may be finished with narrow bias strips, stitching in a narrow seam on the wrong side; then clip the edge at intervals so it will be possible to turn the facing down smoothly on the wrong side. Baste and stitch close to the edge. Of course, the front hems should be finished before doing anything with the neck facing. Sew the poplum to the bottom of the waist, having the seam come to the right side, and be sure the poplum is set on a little fuller than the bottom of the waist. If both edges measure just the same the poplum will not set well. It has a more or less circular edge, and is sewed to a reasonably straight one, and it is necessary to allow a little ease. Turn the seam up toward the waist and cover with a narrow band; stitch it over the seam to the corset cover on the upper edge.

Before sewing on the band, turn it in neatly at each edge and overhand to the corset cover. It makes a much better finish to do this before stitching.

Pattern No. 1348, is for bloomers, that will doubtless be used by many women. Both seat and leg are reinforced, which will add much to the wearing. Crepe de chine or wash satin will be nice to make them of, and if a less expensive material is desired, a light weight sateen will be fine and will wear well.

Pattern No. 1251 is for one of those indispensable slips that form a necessary part of every woman's wardrobe. They may be made of wash satin, crêpe de chine, cambric or sateen in any desired color. In the crêpes one often sees them elaborately trimmed with lace, and sometimes there are bands across the top, front and back, and over the gathered sides that are hemstitched as a finish. It all depends on the time and work you can put on it.

This slip has a camisole top, strapover the shoulders, and the width at the lower edge, for size 36, is about 1¾ yards.

Regular sleep-fed Roosevelt's amazing personal energy

Through a lifetime crowded with the activities of public service, Theodore Roosevelt was a marvel of personal force and endurance to everyone who knew him.

Living his creed of the strenuous life, he renewed the energy he used so freely by keeping to strict and regular sleep habits.

He knew, like so many other eminent men, that undisturbed sleep alone has the power to rebuild the vitality and vigor on which any great achievement is based.

Give a moment's thought to your own sleep habits. Do they help or hinder your personal success?

Consider, too, the part your bedding plays in discouraging or inducing sleep. Study your spring and mattress critically tonight.

Then go to any good furniture store and compare what you are using with the Simmons springs and mattresses you will find there in styles and prices to suit every taste and income. Judge their comfort and your need yourself.

"The Daily Tribune."

Shows Housewifely Qualities.

One evening I gave a little dinner for some out of town friends. I had my table decorated nicely, delicious desserts, and everything palatable. But the thing I lacked was water glasses. I only had some jelly glasses which we had been using until I could get some new ones. I did not let on to the rest of the family and I was hoping my friends would not ask for water.

While dinner was progressing my little son, feeling thirsty and not knowing about the glasses, said to one of my friends, who was sitting next to him: "Would you like to have a glass of water?" My friend said, "I believe I will have a glass."

My son went to the kitchen and brought in a big jelly glass full of water and handed it to my friend. I was so embarrassed that I couldn't make an excuse, so I just let the matter drop and we continued with our eating.

I often went with a girl named Geneva to take her music lesson. Her father was a conductor, and we could get on the street car for 5 cents.

One day we got on the car, put our money in the box, and then looked up and smiled at the conductor. To our surprise, it was not Geneva's father. He didn't smile.

He said, "Where is the rest of your money?"

We meekly told him we had only 3 cents.

He said, "Well, don't you get on a car again unless you have enough."

Everybody stared.

I am only 10 years old, but, yes, that was my most embarrassing moment.

ALICE.

Forehanded.

It was a fine day, so I decided to work with my laundress in order to finish the washing and ironing in one ... which is situated in the front hall near the door, rang. It was a friend noted for her long conversations. We talked and talked, and as I thought my next move would be to go upstairs and make my toilet, I started taking the pins out of my hair and had it hanging down my back when I heard footsteps on the porch, and looking at the open door I beheld the new preacher who had come to make a call. There was no way of escape and I experienced a most embarrassing moment in trying to make apologies for my appearance.

Corns

Lift Right Off with Fingers

Doesn't hurt a bit! A drop of "Freezone" on a sore, touchy corn stops that corn from hurting, then shortly you lift that bothersome corn right out, root and all. No pain, no soreness.

"Freezone" removes hard corns, soft corns, corns between the toes and painful calluses on bottom of feet. Truly magic! You'll laugh!

Tiny bottles cost few cents at any drug store.

ORANGE PEEL TIDBITS FOR TEA

ORANGE strings or candied orange peel are growing in favor as an afternoon tea relish. This confection has piquancy, is not too sweet for those who like it as bon bons are likely to be, has only a trifle of less as many calories as the salted nuts, is pretty, and a little of it goes a long way.

Two evidences of its popularity are first, you can now buy it in grocery stores; second, it is served uniformly in the nicer places where afternoon tea and music refresh the weary shopper and give her courage to go home cheerfully. In grocery stores some of the peel has been colored probably artificially. This gave me an idea, and following that I made a discovery.

The discovery is that orange peel cooked in a combination of fruit juices and sugar that will jelly when cold is softer, nicer, and often a much tastier thing than orange peel cooked in a plain sirup. The amateur, cooking it in a plain sirup, will often allow the water to cook out of the sirup until it is so thick that the orange strings immediately harden to rockiness when they are dry. Of course, bone dry orange strings need not be wasted, for when they are thoroughly dried they may be powdered and use for seasoning pies, puddings, candies made of dried fruit, and sweet sauces.

Preventing Sirup from Thickening.

Long ago I had discovered that to cook these orange strings with a cover on the saucepan prevented the sirup from thickening and so hardening the strings, and I always follow this method. Perhaps this is why for a long time a succession of persons has given rather exaggerated praise to the orange strings I have prepared, and not a few have said they wished they knew how to do it. Therefore, after the recent experiments in cooking orange strings in different fruit juices I decided that I could make quite a treatise on the subject, and would since so few people seem to have success in making these by following a brief recipe.

And, first, let it be said that the acid taste the strings get from being cooked in a sirup of apple or grape or currant juice and sugar, in jellying proportions, is an added point in their favor. It greatly improves their quality. If kept in a covered dish these will not dry out for weeks. They are a convenience to have on hand, for, with these and plain bread and butter and tea, you may have partylike refreshments in short order. They are uniformly served with plain bread and butter sandwiches in one nice place I know of, and they are perhaps still better with the conventional lettuce sandwich and tea.

Quarter Peeling an Orange.

Why should people need to be taught how to peel an orange? You will find an answer if you watch a few of them making the hard work of it they do, and all of them tearing the peel. For orange strings it is best to have full quarter skins, and while some people say to choose thin skinned oranges, I think this is not the best advice. You can get a thick skin off whole if you do as follows: Cut across the blossom end and then carry the cut up first on one side, and then on the other, to the stem end. Cut again at right angles to the first cut, and proceed in the same way. Then cut around the stem scar, and remove it. The flesh is too thick here to use for strings. Now peel off the quarters, which comes off the easier as you get to the bottom. You will be surprised at this easiness, if you have done as many people do, cut down from the stem end to the other for several times without once fully cutting across the blossom end.

On Preparing the Peel.

If you have purchased your oranges, those of about seventy-five cents a dozen size, in their individual wrapping papers, you will not need to wash them before paring them. There has recently been a most interesting article in one of the magazines, written by the household editor and her companion, after a visit to the orange packing houses of California, in which she tells how the oranges are graded, washed, etc.

Give a little thought to the subject and you will see the reasonableness of this, for live dirt or germs cause decay, and the well packed oranges of today, I fancy, keep far better than those of former time, and so we have more of them in hot weather, when fruits are most perishable. Other fruits are being treated in the same way, but the grocer exposes these too often to city dirt and dust.

It is not necessary to soak orange peel before cooking it in plain water until it can be pierced with a toothpick or stiff straw. What is needed is gentle cooking until it is tender. Then drain, and with a teaspoon scrape out the white part, and cut the peel into the thinnest possible strings. It is neces-

BUNGALOW IN STUCCO.

MAGNESITE stucco, light gray in color, which can be applied either on wood or metal lath, covers the entire exterior of the bungalow pictured today. The stucco is protected at the base by a stone or concrete block water table, extending about six inches above the finished grade. Exterior trim, cornices, gutters, moldings, etc., are painted a rich green, while the sash and soffits of eaves and gables are white. This color combination may be varied, of course, to suit individual tastes. Asbestos cement shingles, of variegated colors, including different shades of gray and brown, are used for the roof.

As illustrated, the house occupies a corner lot, although it could be equally well adapted to a 50 foot inside lot, as the greatest dimension in width is only 36 feet, leaving 7 feet for clearance on each side. In case a drive from the street to the garage is desired, the building would have to be placed so as to leave 10 feet on one side and 4 feet on the other. The rear portion of the building is 29 feet 6 inches wide, and the total length is 47 feet, exclusive of the rear service porch.

By means of concrete steps, one reaches the front porch, 7 feet 8 inches wide and 20 feet 5 inches long. It is built into a corner of the building, to one side of the living room and in front of a bedroom, thus being more excluded than if it were built out, as a separate unit. The front entrance is in the center of the building and leads to an entrance hall, 6 feet 6 inches square, which is provided with a large coat closet.

The living room, of generous proportions (12 feet 9 inches by 20 feet 6 inches), is entered through a large cased opening. Directly opposite are a natural fireplace and a set of bookcases, as shown in the floor plan. The windows in the front part of the living room are placed so as to give a sun room effect, with an outside view in three directions.

French doors at the rear of the living room connect it with a good sized dining room, 12 by 15 feet. At the side are two openings. One leads to a private hallway, joining the bedrooms and bath, and the other is an entrance to the encased stairway. There are four windows in the dining room, and, as in the living room, they are of the casement type, with transoms above.

The kitchen is entered by means of a swinging door. Being 9 feet 6 inches by 12 feet, it is neither too small nor too large for one of the most important rooms in the house. To the left of the door is a case for chinaware and to the right is the sink. Opposite the sink and separated from it by a large window is the stove. Another window in the rear adds to the lighting and ventilating facilities and makes the kitchen a cheerful room.

The rear door leads to a service porch. Another door opens from the kitchen to the pantry, which is also used as a passage to the screened porch. This porch, although not large—6 feet by 11 feet 6 inches—may be used as a breakfast room or sleeping porch, as it has access both to the kitchen and to the rear bedroom. The icebox in the pantry is filled from the rear service porch.

Connecting the two bedrooms is an L shaped, private hallway. This provides access to the bathroom from both of the bedrooms, without necessitating any passage through the other rooms. The front bedroom also has a door to the entrance hall. Both have casement sash windows and large clothes closets. The bathroom is 6 feet by 7 feet 10 inches, and has a recessed tub and pedestal lavatory. In the private hallway there are also a linen closet and a door leading to the basement stairway.

This stairway leads to a large, light and dry basement, with the laundry in the rear and an exit to the areaway. There are also a storeroom, vegetable or fruit cellar, coal bin, and an additional toilet room. The heater is placed in the front part of the building, near the chimney.

The bungalow, as shown, has no sleeping rooms on the second floor, but the architect, Bernard L. Ross, suggests that by raising the roof slightly two additional rooms may be finished off, making this a seven instead of a five room dwelling.

The TRIBUNE COOK BOOK

sary to handle the piece of skin carefully in scraping it, because it breaks easily, and then will not make as pretty string, and does make more trouble in the cutting.

When you have scraped out all the white you can, with a teaspoon, leaving a desirably smooth surface—ragged strings are mussy—the strings cut will then be about half and half of outer and inner skin. If you are going to cook them in a colored fruit juice this is good, for the outer skin does not take the color, to any great extent, except with grape and currant juice.

If you want to get threadlike strings, after you have scraped off the white part with a spoon, cut the quarter of skin in half lengthwise, and then with a sharp knife cut out the rest of the white, leaving only the outer skin. When rather densely sugared this makes a variety of peel which some people prefer.

Plain Candying of Peel.

The peel of one large orange candied will make enough for eight or ten portions served in the tiny competiers, or fancy paper cups and so forth, which are used for this confection. For this amount of peel, cooked, and cut in strings, take one-half cup of sugar and one-half cup of water and cook to a sirup. First stir until sugar is surely dissolved, then boil up for about three minutes, and skim if necessary, then put in peel, cover pan, and let simmer for fifteen minutes or so, skim out and let drain, roll in sugar, and put on a wire plate to dry. When sufficiently dry keep in covered glass utensil so that it will not dry out. If made for seasoning purposes, let it become bone dry.

Orange Peel Candied in Grape Juice.

Proceed exactly as with the apple juice, but you will get something of quite different appearance. The apple juice will color the orange strings hardly at all, while the grape colors them to a deep magenta. The two are not much different as to taste, each being pleasantly acid and having the usual orange peel strength.

Currant Jellied Peel.

Melt one-half cup of currant jelly, add to it one-half cup of water and one-half cup of sugar, stir till sugar dissolves, boil up and skim, cook the cooked and cut orange peel in that, with saucepan covered, drain, sprinkle with sugar and dry. The sirup the peel was cooked in will jelly when cold, making a strong product, but one that could be used with meats, or it could be poured out in a thin layer, these layers cut into squares and sugared, and the pieces served with the reddened orange peel for variety.

Using Peel as Garnish.

These jellied peels can be used almost anywhere we would use jelly as a garnish—on meringues, on puddings, with baked apple, etc., but their chief use is that for seasoning up a sandwich you are taking with tea, though they can be used in sandwich fillings or part of the filling. Orange confections have a particular relish with tea, superior to most similar tidbits used for this purpose.

Other Experiments.

Having Halloween in mind, I tried to make some black orange peel, but only got a green and orange one with the particular licorice drops I tried. I dissolved twelve of these—they had a honey base—in a cup of water and reduced this somewhat before adding one-half cup of sugar and then the peel.

Perhaps other licorice drops, and a stronger infusion, would have given a better effect, and perhaps I should have made a thicker sirup than this was by using more sugar. The strings looked well on a tiny piece of china with olive green decorations, and had a most pleasant type of sweetness, suggesting that a honey sirup for candying orange peel would give nice effects. Perhaps cinnamon drops would in a sirup color and season peel agreeably.

Orange Peel Candied in Apple Juice.

Use any fine red skinned apple, or just the cores and skins, and make a juice as for jelly—crab apples and small Jonathans make a fine juice for such purposes. Use the same proportions as in making plain candied peel, or one-half cup of strained juice to one-half cup of sugar. Cook up and skim, but be careful to add the peel before or as soon as it reaches the jellying stage.

With this small quantity well skimmed as it boils up, you will have a jelly in as short a time as three minutes sometimes, a beautiful jelly. Apples cooked in just enough water to cover will give such a juice. After the peel has been cooked, drained, sugared, and drying, and the apple sirup partly cool, pour a little of it over the peel. This sirup when it jellies makes a milder and pleasanter one than that with the orange and currant; in fact, a jelly that a great many people would like in place of a mint jelly made with apple when served with mutton or duck. If it should no jelly it is almost strong enough to use in making a drink of the "ade" type.

A WORLD OF DIFFERENCE.

DEAREST RAY: For a long time I thought you did not care for me, but tonight, when you held me in your arms and told me how much you cared, and asked me to be yours, I knew how wrong I'd been.

Always I watched you from afar, building castles in the air, but never dreaming they would come true.

You have left me for a short time, but I can still feel the pressure of your arms about me and the touch of your lips on mine. The silvery peals of the clock, chiming the hour of midnight, beat but faintly on my ears; and all the endearing terms you used ring constantly in them.

A few short hours ago I stood in a crowded ballroom longing to be at home. Then you came and danced with me, and I forgot that such a thing as time existed. After that came the swift ride home, through lighted streets, and at last—home. The solitude of this house, so different from our previous surroundings, seemed to place us in a separate sphere.

I have often been lonely, but when you told me of your affection I knew I would never be so again, for you'll always be with me, to make the long hours full of joy and happiness.

Ever and always your RUTH.

Helping You and Your Dealer

Solve the Problem of Furniture Selection

It is a problem for most retail furniture dealers to know just what to carry in stock. In most communities, the volume of business does not justify a large display.

In such cases, it is as great a problem for the one who wishes to buy furniture. Limitations of the dealer's stock are often a handicap to proper selection.

PECK & HILLS offers you the privilege of selection from a wholesale display of furniture and floor coverings. We offer your dealer the opportunity of serving by giving the Card of Introduction that admits you.

This solves both problems. You choose from a great variety of models. Yet you actually buy from your neighborhood dealer. He saves on cost of stock and shipping expense. The manufacturer, too, saves in reduced distribution and display expense. These economies make better values, as well as the larger selection, available to you.

Ask Your Neighborhood Furniture Dealer for Your Card of Introduction

Small Reproduction of Card Your Dealer Will Give You. None Admitted Without It.

GOOD Morning!

It's hard to write about this picture—because the thing is such a mixture. The title's good—the cast is, too; the story? Too punk to be true. A weird, wild, nutty inspiration of some o'erworked imagination. It would be sad and would be funny. It must have cost its sponsors money. If it WERE sad or it WERE funny—nobody'd MIND about the money. But one demands a grain of sense—at LEAST—when there's so much pretense.

LOUISE FAZENDA. [Spurr Photo.]

But this "Tea—With a Kick"—has nyther—O, would to heaven it had eyther!

The story's of a noble dad who goes to jail, head bowed and sad. You see, he has been made a "goat" by men who've had him by the throat figuratively and poetically (?) speaking. To prison goes he for their sins. While they skipsout with what they wins. Then to him comes his darling daughter! (She being in a mood for slaughter!) Being a lady and weak, of course, she can't do it, so there's nothing else TO it—but for her to go earn some kale—to get her father out of jail.

The Villain Has the Nerve to Love Her.

And so the darling starts a tea room. It goes all right until with a BOOM—the villain who is jealous of her (the brute—he had the nerve to love her—decides to doctor up the tea—so that she'll get in bad—you see?) And to him come for some protection. Ha, he guessed in the wrong direction!

For she did have an able warrior, in a young, blonde, and handsome lawyer, who wanted the tea queen to wed. When he got wise, he up and said:

"Here's where I truss that evil bird—such evil plans I never heard! And then I will propose again. I don't know when, I don't know when. BUT when she learns how near he's WRECKED her—she'll simply cry for a protector!" And so the young blonde gets to work. Believe you me, he does not shirk!

The scenes roll on, the tea rolls out. The cast goes flit-

Brilliant Blaze of Screen Stars at Biltmore Ball

By Mildred Spain.

LOS ANGELES.—[Special Correspondence.]—It would be hard to say whether the movie crowd distinguished the formal opening of the Biltmore hotel on Tuesday night or the hotel ball lent distinction to the movie crowd.

Perhaps a little of both. If we are to believe Tommy Meighan, we would give all honor to the movie crowd. Tommy has said there are no two ways about it. The photocrats brought the dinner coat into the southern California hostelries. Before the Demillium all was uncouthness. Now, thanks to Messrs. Lasky, et al., we are educated, sartorially speaking.

KATHLYN WILLIAMS.

Certainly Mr. Meighan had some right to say a few words in behalf of stars and their gorgeous raiment. They patterned the ballrooms of the Biltmore with the radiance of jewels.

A colorful party was given by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Eyton, Kathlyn Williams, for Pola Negri, William Tilden II., and members of the consular body of Peru and Mexico.

Miss Negri was striking in a dark green chiffon gown cut low in the back, a turban of metal cloth, and an ivory handled fan that did almost as much for her as her eyes.

Mary Pickford was in a gown of apricot satin made with a tight long waisted bodice and a full trailing skirt. Doug's hair is still some six or seven inches below where it ought to be. This, understand, for the part of "The Thief of Bagdad."

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Niblo (Enid Bennett) and Florence Vidor were guests of A. E. Warmington. Miss Bennett was in silver cloth and filmy white. There was a fillet of silver in her hair.

Tangerine chiffon velvet was worn by Norma Talmadge.

The most startling gown seen was worn by Mae Murray. It was made of white crystal beads cut extremely low with single strands of beads connecting the waist line and the front of the bodice. The circular skirt flared, as is the way with most of Miss Murray's gowns.

Patsy Ruth Miller looked charming in a dark green georgette gown trimmed with a girdle of brilliants.

Helen Ferguson was Spanish in a flowered shawl and a black chiffon velvet gown with armlets of brilliants.

Betty Jo, who designs so many of the costumes of the stars, was vivacious in cloth of gold with great hoops of pearls for earrings.

Doug Issues Ban on Knickers.

The men aren't going to get slighted in the new clothes edicts of Hollywood. Doug Fairbanks says knickers of all varieties are not to be worn in Hollywood. Mr. Fairbanks proved his statement when he and his director, Raoul Walsh, appeared on the boulevard in long trousers and bright blazers. The blazers to be worn with the new long sport trousers are the striped kind that were worn ten years ago.

Another style has been set for Hollywood. This time it's chairs and sponsored by no less a style authority than Ben Turpin. You know, of course, that the stars have special chairs on the lot with their names written on them. Ben had his chair painted with two daring eyes rampant on the headboard. He liked the idea so well that he gave Irene Lents a chair with her initials in gold lettering. The idea has wonderful possibilities.

Mae Marsh, when she completes "Daddies," is to take a

One Meets Ballet, Piano, Opera Today

By Edward Moore.

OUT of the half dozen or more musical observances scheduled between noon and night of this day of rest three stand out with what, in advance, would seem to be unusual interest. Taking them in their chronological order—always a safer method than an effort to reckon comparative merit for the reviewer who values his peace of mind—Adolph Bolm and his ballet will be on the stage of the Apollo theater this afternoon.

The ballet is an art that is likely to be disregarded on the one side or regarded with much fervent affection on the other, with apparently no middle ground, but those who look upon it as one of the fine arts, which it is, will have good cause to believe in it today. Mr. Bolm is known in Chicago through being the director of the Civic Opera ballet. In past years he has been an important member of the imperial ballet of Petrograd, the Diaghileff Ballet Russe (he first visited Chicago with that organization), and the Metropolitan Opera house of New York.

He will have with him a lovely young nymph of the dance who takes billing under the name of Anna Ludmila, another, Alexandre N. Maximova, from the imperial ballet of Petrograd, ten more solo dancers, and a supporting corps of fifty. There will be a symphony orchestra under the direction of Isaac Van Grove.

The program of some twenty-six items contains a Chopin group, Schumann's "Carnival," a Bach Prelude and Fugue, the Tatar dance from "Prince Igor," a Russian village scene, Debussy's "Puck," and many others. John Alden Carpenter's "Krazy Kat" will not, I regret to say, be performed, but the orchestra will play the "Katnip Blues" from that delectable score.

De Pachmann in an All-Chopin Program.

About half an hour later Vladimir de Pachmann, the pianist, will take the stage of the Auditorium. The eminent "Chopinsee," as James Gibbons Huneker used to call him, is visiting Chicago for the first time in a dozen years, and will play a program made up entirely from the works of the composer out of whose name his title was constructed.

He acknowledges being 75 years old, but unless accounts from other centers are unworthy of trust he has discovered the secret of eternal youth in his playing, and is practically as good a pianist as he admits he is. This does not mean the primary class by many parasangs. Those who remember him in former days will recall the way he used to frolic, gnomelike, about the stage, adjusting his chair to within a fraction of an inch, carrying on an animated conversation with people back stage and in the audience, finally sitting down and veritably charming the soul out of Chopin's music. Considerable of a show he made it, with his audible comments part of the entertainment, which in all probability no one knew better than Mr. de Pachmann himself.

In the evening there will be Polish opera at the Auditorium, Moniuszko's "Halka." The company comes from Milwaukee and its members would seem to be amateurs in the sense that they earn their livings outside of music. Peter Kaminski, one of the cast, is, according to accounts, a clerk in a drug store; Emily Klebanski, coloratura soprano, has a similar position in a department store; Rosa Saskowska is a bookbinder; A. J. Lukaszewski is the business manager of a

"Cymbeline" Holds Auditors Until Long After Midnight

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Some of the neighbors insist they had a good time at the first performance of "Cymbeline," which E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe revived last week to sweeten their Shakespearean répertoire. But I think some of the neighbors are lying.

Before we go farther with this report, however, it is no more than fair to the worthiest of our Shakespearean actors to say that since the opening night they have done much to improve "Cymbeline." They have cut it from four hours to three hours and a quarter, for one thing, and they have induced the fair J. M. to speak her speeches a little more trippingly on the tongue, which eventually should save another half hour.

The dear lady was that honeyed and deliberate the opening night I was afraid she would become impaled upon a period, or, failing to hurdle one of William's semicolons, fall and break her dear neck. And then again, along about midnight I feared she wouldn't.

And yet Miss Marlowe meant well. She had been studying Imogen all summer, and she loves the part. Here was her chance to give the performance of her career, and she was determined to do it. Which led her to overaccentuate and drag out every speech.

"Cymbeline," as a matter of truth, is no more than a third interesting at best. Which is the best of reasons why it has been so seldom played. Some years ago I used to hear ancient gentlemen, eager to extol the theater of their day, speak of Iachimo's visit to Imogen's bedchamber as romantic drama spiced with adventure, than which there was none better.

And I have known ladies to blush (this, of course, being in the old days when rouge was less opaque than it is today) as they thought of the crafty one catching the sleeping Imogen with her reading lamp still burning, permitting him to note the mole upon her fair flesh, with report of the location of which he forced Leonatus to doubt his good wife's chastity.

But past the incidents of the wager and of Iachimo's visit, first, to Imogen's boudoir to give her opportunity to repulse his advances with impassioned ardor and oratory, and later to her chamber to steal her bracelet and note the mole, it becomes deadly dull and slow of movement and winds up in a series of those clumsy battle scenes with an army of six on one side and five on the other that the cinema has helped to make foolish.

Quite Enough to Put Them to Sleep.

In its first staging "Cymbeline" was presented in two acts and twenty scenes—four hours of playing, with one short intermission of five minutes. It was enough to put any audience into a stupor, and this one was torpid from 10:30 to midnight. After which the more gallant of the escorts pried their ladies out of the narrow seats at the Jolson and started them homeward.

The production itself is an attractive combination of forestage draperies and back stage scenes, and the cast is in all ways competent. Mr. Sothern was quite fiery as Leonatus. Frederick Lewis is particularly good as the prying Iachimo, and the other familiars of the Sothern-Marlowe stage family, notably Frank Peters, Albert Howson, Laura Chippendale,

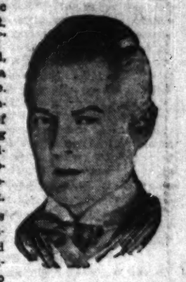
Patient Thoughts for a Plaintive Playgoer

By Sheppard Butler.

"WHY," asked a friend the other night after the second act of a new play—"Why don't you start a red light column?

"I don't mean—now, wait a minute. I mean just a friendly warning: a danger signal or something that will let people know what to stay away from. There ought to be some protection for the public against—O well, the evening's shot. Let's go back and see the rest of it."



LIONEL BARRYMORE coming to Powers' in a new play, "Laugh, Clown, Laugh."

All of which, as it happened, was about as unreasonable a plaint as you can well imagine. The petulant gentleman is a confirmed first-nighter. He is one of those who have been proclaiming the desirability of establishing Chicago in its rightful place as a production center—i. e., a point of departure for theatrical experiment.

Of late, he has been getting his wish. Many new and untried entertainments have been deposited within our loop for their first ventures with paying audiences. Up to a year ago we sat at the second table; our dramatic fare came mostly from New York. But in recent months the managers have evinced a lively inclination to start things in Chicago.

And, now that they are doing it, my friend complains. He is alert in matters of the theater and needs no admonition concerning shows that have been tested elsewhere, for he knows all about them long before they reach this frontier. He finds, however, that it irks him to be experimented on. He doesn't want to see new plays unless they are good. And he asks me to print warnings about pieces concerning which nobody knows anything!

You just can't please 'em.

Nine New Ones, and More to Come.

New plays have been crowding in, to be sure, and by all the tokens they will continue to do so. Tidings from the east have it that Mr. Belasco will send Lionel Barrymore and Miss Irene Fenwick to Powers' two weeks from tomorrow night for their first performances in the Tom Cushing drama, "Laugh, Clown, Laugh." Mr. Woods has a couple of comedies by Frederick Lonsdale which he proposes to reveal here, and many other ventures are on the fire. My friend may as well submit.

It is, of course, undeniable that being a production center has its penalties. The current season is yet young, but already nine new diversions have been exposed to our more or less tender mercies. And so far the ledger seems to balance about this way:

PROFIT.	LOSS.
"The Dancing Honeymoon."	"The Voice."
"Spring Cleaning."	"Dangerous People."
"Sunbonnet Sue."	"A Bit of Dust."
	"Time."
	"The Rainy Day."

DOUBTFUL.
"The Deep Tangled Wildwood."

Not a particularly high average there; no doubt we would have been happier, on the whole, observing nine entertainments that had been tried and approved elsewhere. But we wouldn't have had "Spring Cleaning." And we wouldn't have had the thrill, such as it is, of seeing the new things first.

As for the average aforesaid, it is seldom higher in the theater. Generally it is lower. Any experienced New Yorker

ON THE TRAIL IN HOLLYWOOD BY RICHARD HENRY LITTLE

Let us then go forth and seek in the highways and the byways. And especially, brother, in the byways.

I BOUGHT a book the first five minutes I was in Hollywood. It was a very pretty book. It was full of pictures of the beautiful homes in Hollywood and beautiful moving picture mothers with their beautiful children on their knees. There were beautiful fathers going to and from the Y. M. C. A. and beautiful women going into the women's clubs and the art galleries. In the front of the book were all the bitter things that many newspapers have said up to proving how untrue and unkind and uncharitable all those things were. And the book was called "Can Any Good Come Out of Hollywood?" It hasn't been screened yet. That makes the book unique. It's the only printed thing in Hollywood that hasn't been grabbed by the cinema. I bought the book, it cost a dollar, and sat for a long time contemplating the title:

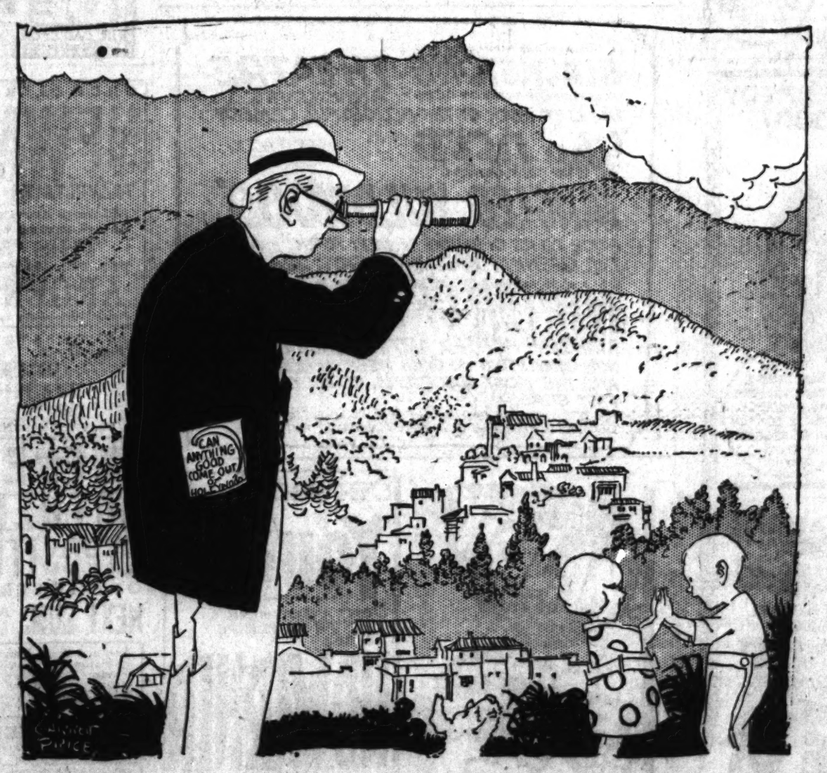
I'll bite. Can any good come out of Hollywood?

The Hollywood hotel belonged in the truly good class. There could be no doubt about that. I surmised that because very few motion picture people lived there. There were several boarders who played good parts in the jumping pictures, but no stars. Nor did the stars ever twinkle around the Hollywood. Most of the guests seemed to be rich widows from the east who loved to come out and bask in the California sunshine on the front porch of the hotel.

Judging from the picture called "Hollywood," the kings and queens of the cinema parade back and forth behind a brass band in the lobby of the Hollywood hotel from early dawn to late at night. But, chatting with many of the royal families of moviedom, I was told by them that the first time they had ever seen the Hollywood hotel was when they went there to be filmed in the picture. I had expected to see Charlie Chaplin running around the dining room slamming the guests in the face with custard pie, Doug Fairbanks swinging from the chandeliers by his feet, Ben Turpin being thrown back and forth through the windows, Mary Miles Minter and her mamma battling with six ounce gloves on top of the clerk's desk, and cunning little Jackie Coogan swinging two cats by their tails.

And no cracking of pistols. But probably they have the murders only on Tuesdays and Fridays.

But let us look around the lobby of the Hollywood hotel at any hour of the day and what do we find? Fifteen rich widows rocking gently in the sunshine which floods the great front porch, Ned Sparks in golfing costume teaching Peggy Cleary and Margo Clayton to play mah jongg, a very pretty little girl sitting in a corner studying her little lessons with her tutor, and Mrs. Bill Carleton starting off to the soldiers' home at Sawtelle with an armful of books. Also Mrs. Craig Biddle of Philadelphia bidding her eldest child Drexel good-by as he fares forth to put a little real class into the movies.



Let us then go forth and seek in the highways and the byways. And especially, brother, in the byways.

Truly there is naught but beauty and goodness here.

But one goes to Hollywood to be shocked. Courage! Let us seek further.

Leaving the Hollywood hotel, we meet Al Cohn. Al writes continuities and titles for the movies. He knows every one in this the third largest industry in the United States. We hail Albert and repeat the Flapper's prayer, "Lead us not into temptation, but show us where it's at."

"Walk this way, please," replies Mr. Cohn. He pauses in front of a group of fine buildings plainly of an educational character.

"What do you guess this is?"

"The opium manufactory," we hazard.

"Not so," says Alfred proudly. "This is the Hollywood High school. There's a hundred thousand people in Hollywood, several of whom do not use coke or morphine, and they think they've got the finest high school in the country. But speaking of colleges, the University of California, southern branch, is in Hollywood, and thitherward we will now wend our way."

"We will not," I said firmly. "I know what Hollywood is and I wish to have my finer feelings severely outraged."

There must be a pool of total depravity in Hollywood. Oh, if we could only find it!

"Follow me," said Alfred pleasantly. We climbed into his demon car and soon we stopped again. "Name it," said Alfred.

"It is a very beautiful building," said we, "but, of course, this being Hollywood, it must be the Hashish Storage Warehouse."

"Hashheese Storage Co." said we.

"The Hollywood Women's club," said Albert proudly. "Sixteen hundred members, handsomest clubhouse in the country, an auditorium as big as a downtown theater——"

"Onward, Alfred," we said imploringly. "Onward and downward."

Next we stopped in front of a rambling stone edifice overrun with vines and roses and with many people eating luncheon on the broad verandas.

"That is the Hollywood Writers' club," announced Mr. Cohn. "Let us hasten in; the waiters are now passing the steaming bowls of nutritious opium. There's Dan Frohman, Tom Buchanan, Clara Beranger, the Rev. Neal Dodd, Carrie Jacobs Bond——"

We approached and I looked into one of the bowls a waiter carried past. It contained nothing but vegetable soup. We hastened away.

But, HOLD! The poppy plant is a—— Ah! We should have examined that vegetable soup more closely.

"Now," said Alfred, "whither? Would you like to see the Studio club, which is maintained as a home for young girls just getting their start in the pictures, or our two art galleries, our five public libraries, our twenty-two churches, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A.——"

"Alfred," I said sternly, "how long has this been going on?"

"What?" asked Mr. A. Cohn, registering surprise.

"Now, I have heard nothing about all this," I said sternly. "Those things could not have been in Hollywood very long. They must have built the churches, and the clubs, and the libraries, and the art galleries last Tuesday or Wednesday."

A. Cohn led the way to a candy store, where we imbibed freely of root beer. As we staggered out of the candy store A. Cohn had a bright idea.

"Tonight," said A. Cohn, "I have in mind a place you would like to go to up in one of the canyons."

"Not the Hollywood Bowl," I said sharply. "I was there last night. Wonderful music, inspiring, uplifting, unequaled, but I came not to Hollywood to listen to a symphony concert in the Bowl."

Oh, far from such. "Say, what time do the debauches start?"

"No," said A. Cohn, "we will not go to the Bowl. But far off in yon hills, when the somber shades of night have fallen and the blue mist is stealing up the valleys——"

A. Cohn made me shiver. There was something sinister in the way he spoke. I recalled the celebrated case of William Desmond Taylor.

"No murders," I said sharply. "I wish to see the wildest debauches that are held in Hollywood, but I draw the line on your murders."

A. Cohn registered grief. "I don't understand," he said. "I was merely suggesting that we go to see a performance of the pilgrimage play, 'The Life of the Christ.' It is beautifully and reverently done, you'll find a lot of motion picture people there——"

A. Cohn suddenly found himself standing entirely alone on the corner in front of the drug store. He no doubt registered amazement.

"Why, that's very strange! Now, what in the world became of that guy?"

The New Plays

First Aid for First Nighters on Attractions Scheduled for the Coming Weeks in the Theaters.

OPENING TONIGHT.

"Secrets" [Harris]—Miss Margaret Lawrence in a play by Rudolf Besier and May Edginton—a tale of marital experience which spans fifty-five years and involves Miss Lawrence's appearance as a girl of 14, a young married woman, a mature matron, and a grandmother. Tom Nesbit, a good actor last seen here with Miss Ruth Chatterton in "Mary Rose," is Miss Lawrence's vis-à-vis in the cast, and there are many other players.

"I'll Say She Is" [Studebaker]—A musical revue of Philadelphia origin, running largely to girls, dancing, and picturesque mise-en-scène. The cast is headed by the Four Marx Brothers, familiar cutups hereabouts, and includes Miss Lotta Miles, Miss Florence Hedges, Miss Marcella Hardie, d'Andrea and Walters, dancers, and a jazz orchestra.

"Molly Darling" [Colonial]—The musical comedy which occupied the Palace Music hall a year ago last summer, returning now with a considerably revised personnel of entertainers. Chief among them is Jack Donahue, the dancing comedian; others are Miss Ann Milburn, Miss Nina Penn, George Phelps, Edgar Gardner, and the youthful pair known as Billy and Billie Taylor.

IMPENDING JOYS.

"The Old Soak" [Princess, Oct. 21]—Don Marquis' amusing comedy of prohibition and its ways, to be played here by Tom Wise and a "special company" which includes John E. Young, George Meeker, Miss Joan Shaw, and Miss Adelaide Hibbard.

"Merton of the Movies" [Blackstone, Oct. 22]—George S. Kaufman and Marc Connelly's footlighting of Harry Leon Wilson's amusing Hollywood story, with Glenn Hunter and Miss Florence Nash in the rôles, respectively, of Merton Gill and the Montague girl.

"Laugh, Clown, Laugh" (Powers', Oct. 29)—Lionel Barrymore and Miss Irene Fenwick, newly under Mr. Belasco's direction, in their first performance of a play by Tom Cushing.

"The Music Box Revue" [Colonial, Oct. 29.—The second of Mr. Irving Berlin's stately pageants, with Clark and McCullough, the comedians, and hosts of other people in it.

"Bombo" (Apollo, Nov. 12)—Al Jolson with his last season's show, coming for a return engagement of three weeks.

Stage Jottings

Florenz Ziegfeld is telling them in New York again that his next "Follies" will be his last. "No theater is large enough," he says, "and the prices charged are not high enough to pay the tremendous expenses that have developed in recent years. The original 'Follies' cost $13,000 to produce and $3,800 weekly to run. The coming 'Follies' will cost more than $350,000 and $26,000 weekly to run. The goose that for eighteen years has laid the golden egg for so many people has been killed by greed."

Meanwhile, the new "Follies" is scheduled to open in New York next Thursday night, and all is excitement.

Frederick Lonsdale, author of "Spring Cleaning," has been visiting the Ziegfelds in the east since his departure from Chicago. One result of his sojourn is a practically completed play for Mrs. Ziegfeld, better known to fame as Billie Burke. Another is a skit for the "Follies." George M. Cohan, also, has joined the illustrious company of those who write for the "Follies," having prepared an act for his old friend, Hap Ward, who will return to the stage in the Ziegfeld annual.

Otis Skinner is in Cleveland, prepared to make his first appearance there tomorrow night in "Sancho Panza," the play which Melchior Lengyel has made for him out of Cervantes' immortal "Don Quixote." Skinner was to have acted this season in another adaptation—Edith Ellis' stage version of "Tartarin on the Alps"—but has laid this aside for the time being.

The Johnstone family of Evanston will be well represented in the local theaters this week. Tom Johnstone is the composer of "Molly Darling," at the Colonial, and "I'll Say She Is," at the Studebaker, while his brother, William, is the author of book and lyrics for the latter divertimento. Both, once upon a time, were newspaper cartoonists.

George Arliss has invaded his native England with "The Green Goddess," and is reported now to be the rage of London. He has been virtually unknown to the English stage since he came to this country with Mrs. Patrick Campbell in 1901.

William Hodge will try "For All of Us" on the New York public tomorrow night. Most of those who acted the piece during its long Chicago run last season are still with him.

"Cymbeline" Holds Audience Until After Midnight and France Bendtsen, are pleasantly placed.

I see by the papers "Cymbeline" will be taken off after this week and the old repertoire resumed, which means that it has not inspired a popular response. It will, however, serve the purpose for which it was revived, which is to freshen the Sothern-Marlowe repertoire on tour and give the press boys something new to talk about.

Galsworthy on Windows and Vision.

John Galsworthy was in America on a lecture tour and not long away from his frequently foggy London when he felt a play coming on. In the sunshine of Santa Barbara he sat down and wrote it. And a comedy called "Windows" was the result.

This week the Theater guild began its sixth subscription season with this Galsworthy opus, and it proved a thoughtful and entertaining play, but one with more philosophy than drama to commend it, and rather an obvious philosophy at that.

Clean windows, agrees the author, make for clear vision, and ideals are not what they seem, because they are so seldom founded on realities. To point which argument he presents the interesting case of the March family.

Father March is a psychological novelist and naturally "knows nothing of human nature." Johnny, the son, is a bit of a poet, back from the war and convinced that the world is sledding toward sheol without an ideal left to serve as a brake. Mother March is a sober British matron, bending backward in her everyday practicality, and daughter Mary flutters around the three, sympathizing with her father and respecting her mother.

Serving this family in the minor capacity of window washer is one Bly, whose daughter, Faith, has just been released from prison after serving two years for having smothered her two days old illegitimate child. She wanted to save the babe from the curse of living.

The Marches need a parlor maid, but they hesitate to take the Bly girl on. At least Mrs. March hesitates. The others, swayed by their idealism, are keen for the experiment. With the result that Mrs. March gives way and the girl is engaged. Two weeks later she is caught kissing Johnny, and there is a row.

Johnny, a passionate defender of chivalry, stands by the girl. Mrs. March insists she must go. Father and daughter Mary side, half-heartedly, with Johnny, and the discussion rages. Finally, with a second chance won for Faith, it is discovered she has no desire to stay on. She is not looking for another prison. She wants freedom.

"I have it," declares mother, whose vision has at the moment been cleared by an extra glass of after-dinner cordial; "she wants to be loved. You've all been thinking she wants to be saved, but she wants to be loved."

"See people as they are, then you won't be disappointed. Don't have ideals. Have vision—just plain vision."

The Theater guild has furnished a complete and harmonious cast and production. Henry Travers scores as the philosophical Bly, first cousin to Kennedy's drainman; Phyllis Povah is the rebelliously human Faith; Helen Westley plays Mrs. March, and Moffat Johnson her novelist husband. Young Kenneth McKenna and Frieda Inescort are the children.

Scarlet Ladies Who Are Heroines.

I had a letter from Jeanne Eagels last week suggesting that something should be done to honor Sam Forrest as the producer of both "Rain" and "Red Light Annie," because of the uncanny insight he has revealed in directing the scarlet ladies who are their heroines.

"Since Mary Ryan, like myself, is playing a scarlet play," writes Miss Eagles, "and Mr. Forrest directed us both with such distinction, and since he had a hand in the writing of both plays, it naturally raises the question:

Scarlet Ladies Who Are Heroines.

I had a letter from Jeanne Eagels last week suggesting that something should be done to honor Sam Forrest as the producer of both "Rain" and "Red Light Annie," because of the uncanny insight he has revealed in directing the scarlet ladies who are their heroines.

"Since Mary Ryan, like myself, is playing a scarlet play," writes Miss Eagles, "and Mr. Forrest directed us both with such distinction, and since he had a hand in the writing of both plays, it naturally raises the question: 'Where did he get the experience?' His insight to these girls is not superficial; he has the rare gift of going beneath the surface for his character study, and laying bare the soul of the woman, and that he can do this without offending the good taste of the theater makes the accomplishment a dramatic jewel."

Which, in a way, brings up the whole question of harlotry and the drama. Whether or not Mr. Forrest would be willing to submit his authorities or relate facts as to the experience upon which he has drawn we do not know. But, with the number of trollops in the drama constantly increasing, I suspect that sooner or later we will have to bring them together in some sort of scarlet sisters' convention if, as Miss Eagles suggests, those properly entitled to credit are to be rewarded.

I, for example, think Pauline Lord's Anna Christie of the Minneapolis hokatonk the artistic peer of all the fallen ladies of the stage. But I may be wrong. There are many to claim as much for Florence Reed, who is playing her own particular type of light-o'-love in "The Lullaby."

Elsie Ferguson was impressively realistic in "Outcast," and I hear Estelle Winwood, in Chicago, gives a vivid performance of a light lady in "Spring Cleaning."

In "The Crooked Square" Samuel Shipman releases three or four painted hussies from the woman's reformatory who may or may not be true to type, and down in Greenwich Village Margaret Wycherly is playing a painted one who, after thirteen hectic years, is saved by her former husband, a surgeon, and taken again into his household as his second wife.

New Standards of Comparison.

This piece by the Italian Luigi Pirandello is called "Floriani's Wife," and though it has not a chance in the world so far as the paying public is concerned, it does present an interesting dramatic situation and something new in the way of stage harlots.

Mrs. Floriani, we assume, was terribly mistreated by Mr. Floriani when first she was his wife. This drove her to desert her 3 year old child and fly to a lover. Thirteen years later, after the new meeting with her husband, he, partly from remorse, agrees to take her back that she may see and know the daughter who thinks her a dead saint and has masses said for her on all her birth anniversaries. And she, hungry for her child, goes back.

The daughter, however, refuses to have anything to do with her "stepmother," banding all her energies to proving her a harlot. And in the end there is a strong situation in which the mother, to whom a second child has been born, refuses to let the older daughter cast a slur at her baby sister. She is the mother of them both, she shouts, and one is as legitimate as the other. And then, having broken her pledge of secrecy, she takes her babe and goes again to a waiting lover. Miss Wycherley's individual performance is sufficiently good to give the cast some little distinction.

Harlotry in the drama, as you see, is becoming a good deal of an art. And it may be, as Miss Eagles intimates, that we should establish new standards of comparison. Perhaps, if not a scarlet ladies' convention at the end of the season, a debate might be arranged in which certain of the older actresses could speak for the sinners of the past, for Camille and Sappho of the walkup apartment; for Du Barry and Mrs. Warren. And several of the yoonger women could counter with a defense of those of the present. For which ringside seats should sell as readily as did those for the recent discussion between the Messrs. Dempsey and Firpo.

Mitzi as an Orphan.

None of last week's plays did so very well unless it be the Mitzi show at the Liberty. A Mitzi show is like a Fred Stone show. It doesn't much matter what it is so long as its popular star is shown to advantage. Little Miss Hajos, for example, with any one of a half hundred versions of the Cinderella plot, can travel from coast to coast and seldom play to less than $15,000 a week.

Which in part is due to the observant showmanship of that honest Bostonian realtor, Col. Henry W. Savage. "Never let her play anything that can't be seen and enjoyed by the whole d—— family," is Col. Henry's motto. But the d—— stands for decent and not for damned.

This year Mitzi is a blue serge orphan with a monkey and a hand organ. I didn't quite gather whether she plays the organ for a living or for a street fair in which the chorus boys and girls indulge. But either way she stumbles into an antique shop run by the genial Shakespearean comic, Sidney Greenstreet, and falls plump (and plump is the word) into the lap of a romance represented by young Mr. Mitzi, who in club and home life is Boyd Marshall.

Thereafter she acquires a wishing ring and dreams, or thinks she dreams, of adventure and finally of winning the love of the hero. It is all simple and sensibly foolish, if you will permit the possibility. Zelda Sears wrote it, and Zelda is a bright lady. Harold Levey did the score, which contains one song hit called, reasonably enough, "A Love Song." And there are several other pleasant tunes.

Lieutenant Commander John Philip Sousa has an appreciative sense of stage decoration, as well as music, in his band concerts. He has, therefore, engaged Miss Senior as violin soloist on his present tour. He, she, and the band will be at the Auditorium Oct. 28.

Patient Thoughts for a Plaintive Playgoer—News of the Theaters

will tell you that inveterate playgoing there is not an unmixed blessing. One sees so many failures. Good, bad, indifferent, the shows line up along Broadway to try their luck. The good ones live, and eventually we see them. The bad ones die, and we are spared them. The arrangement has its advantages.

Theatrical experiment here is a different matter. If we are to have it, we must take the good, the bad, and be indifferent. My petulant friend knows that. I shall start no red light column.

These Newspaper Playwrights!

The local stage is getting to be positively overrun with newspaper men turned playwrights. Messrs. Kaufman and Connelly, authors of "The Deep Tangled Wildwood," are of that classification, Mr. Kaufman being dramatic editor of the New York Times and Mr. Connelly having, from time to time, contributed to various journals. Their play departs at the end of this week, but another of their contriving, "Merton of the Movies," will arrive immediately to take its place at the Blackstone.

DON MARQUIS.

Now comes Don Marquis, New York columnist, with his comedy called "The Old Soak," which takes residence a week from tonight at the Princess. This play sprang directly from the pages of a newspaper, for the character of the Old Soak wandered into Marquis column long ago and was an established favorite when, at the suggestion of Philip Goodman, he was, as they say, footlighted.

Later on, of course, we shall have a view of a whole flock of newspaper characters, the same being the members of the Potter family, which J. P. McEvoy has transferred to the stage from his delectable series of Sunday skits in THE TRIBUNE. The comedy of "The Potters" is now in rehearsal down east with Donald Meek in the role of Pa Potter, and will soon see the light in Baltimore.

Out of the Past.

Vivid and sometimes piteous disclosures out of the past are scattered here and there in the catalog of an auction held in New York last week. The merchandise which was placed on sale comprised certain of the effects of the late William Winter, for many years dramatic critic of the New York Tribune. Among them were bundle after bundle of personal letters signed with the greatest names in the theater.

One little packet bears the handwriting of Mrs. Leslie Carter, and touches upon the famous actress' break with David Belasco, that unhappy incident about which so much was written and so little was known. And here are the most poignant sentences of all.

Writing to Winter (to whom she was practically a stranger) in December, 1906, and January, 1907, Mrs. Carter said:

I have had so much unkindness—so much harsh judgment—so little understanding or sympathy shown to me at all . . . that my little visit to you was a very great comfort to me. I am very, very unhappy; very perplexed; very lonely; and I thank you with my whole heart for your tender consideration . . . I cannot face life without Mr. David. I want him to forget all the things that have hurt him. I want him to be the big, fine, great man and friend I have known and cared for and served, for all these years . . . I don't want to work for any one but Mr. Dave. Nineteen years is a lifetime . . . My ideal is gone; my idol has fallen and I see that what I worshipped did not exist . . . The only things I remember now are the cruel, bitter, needless hurts . . . He is a very great man.

This for the eyes of William Winter alone. Now it is offered to the world, for a price, by his son.

Gossip of Plays and Players.

Owen Davis' Pulitzer prize play, "Icebound," recently withdrawn from booking at the Harris, will come to town after all, but will be seen at another theater. Lester Bryant, managing director of the Playhouse, has bought an interest in the production and proposes to stage it in his own establishment and under his own auspices. It will arrive, according to present plans, on Dec. 8. Mr. Bryant gives assurance that Robert Ames, originally an important member of the cast, will return to it for the Chicago engagement. Ames was left without employment recently by the failure of "We've Got to Have Money," and has been discussing with George M. Cohan the advisability of assuming the leading role in "The Song and Dance Man," now being played by Cohan himself. The negotiations, however, are said to have come to naught.

Two more of the so-called standard theaters are to be turned over, for a time, at least, to the movies. The Garrick, some time in November, will give shelter to the film version of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," and the Great Northern, when the approaching Wagnerian singers are through with it, will have a picture based on F. Marion Crawford's novel, "The White Sister."

Miss Jane Cowl, now occupied with "Romeo and Juliet," gives friends in Chicago a hint that she may not immediately add "Antony and Cleopatra" to her repertoire, as has been planned. She desires to turn aside from Shakespeare and put on a new play, concerning which she will tell nothing, but for which she has high hopes. Some weeks ago it was made known that she had expressed admiration for a drama called "The Flame," by one Hans Muller. This may be the piece in question. And, of course, it may not.

Schulte Glasses
Three to Thirty Dollars

Schulte Holdfast frames with specially ground toric lenses. Also two other styles of frames. Including examination and guarantee
$7.50
Who will take the responsibility?
Somebody has to determine whether your eyes need glasses. Somebody has to decide which glasses are suited to you.
Who is qualified to be that somebody? It is very important that you know.
Over 200,000 Chicagoans have been successfully fitted with glasses at Schulte's—indisputable testimony of the kind of optometrical service that is the first consideration here. And you have only to enter any one of the Schulte stores to sense the reason for this tremendous preponderance of faith in the Schulte methods.
To begin with, you are treated—not as a customer—but as a patient. Selling you glasses is a secondary thing at Schulte's. Scientifically fitting you with the right kind of glasses is the main thing.
An able optometrist—one who has won distinction in his profession—examines your eyes in a private, scientifically equipped test room. The glasses he recommends are specially ground to prescription specifications in our own shops.
And yet you don't need to pay much. You can get a stylish pair of glasses, like those shown above, at Schulte's for as low as $7.50. At this price you get a high grade frame and toric (curved for wide vision) lenses specially ground to your individual eyesight needs.
You can pay more than $7.50—you can pay as high as $30 for your glasses at Schulte's—you can get frames of more expensive construction—but the examination and service will be the same.
Don't experiment. Avoid postponement. Why not have your eyes examined tomorrow?

newspaper; Eugene Stadowitz is a dancer.

Some of which stands in the way of the fact that the performance was something quite a bit out of the ordinary, according to the Milwaukeeans who heard it last May. At all events, it ought to be interesting.

Adapting Melody to Marathons.

There would seem to be an attempt to couple music with other sports in next summer's Olympic games at Paris. They are sending out word that composers of the different nations admitted to the games are invited to compete for a silver gilt Olympic medal and diploma, the first prize; a silver Olympic medal and diploma, the second, and a bronze Olympic medal and diploma the third. Honor, rather than a monetary prize, is the reward.

There are restrictions, the most important of which is that the submitted composition must be unpublished, and must draw its inspiration from ideas of sport. Possibly the promoters feel that certain composers have already based their works on the Marathon run. But, once based, it may be a symphony, a musical drama, a chorus, or a song, as long as its running time does not exceed one hour.

Scores should be sent to the offices of the French Olympic committee, 20 Rue de Grammont, Paris, before Feb. 1, 1924. If orchestral, it should be accompanied by an arrangement for piano of two or four hands; if a song there must be a French translation of the text. All tempo indications should be in Italian. Of course, the composer's name, nationality, and address must accompany the score in any case. The Commission des Arts et Relations Exterieures will hold the manuscripts at the disposal of the contestants immediately after the conclusion of the Olympic games.

An international jury of personalities in art and sport, with composers in the majority, will make the awards, and a public performance, either in the stadium or a concert hall, will be given of the first prize winner. As prescribed by law, none of the scores sent to the contest may be played or reproduced without the written consent of their author.

One may confidently look for the Aria of the 100 Meter Dash and the Pole Vault Fugue. A Pentathlon Symphony would probably be quite stimulating.

Where D'Albert Got His Start.

There is one Chicagoan who is watching the approach of Eugene D'Albert's opera, "Die Toten Augen," an item in the repertoire of the Wagnerian Opera company, with more than common interest. She is Mrs. Fanny L. Thomson, who resides at the Scottish home in Riverside. She writes that her husband gave Eugene his first lessons in Mozart sonatas many years ago, and that she herself gave Frederick Lamond, the pianist, his Royal Academy of Music certificate at an examination

Adapting Melody to Marathons.

There would seem to be an attempt to couple music with other sports in next summer's Olympic games at Paris. They are sending out word that composers of the different nations admitted to the games are invited to compete for a silver gilt Olympic medal and diploma, the first prize; a silver Olympic medal and diploma, the second, and a bronze Olympic medal and diploma the third. Honor, rather than a monetary prize, is the reward.

There are restrictions, the most important of which is that the submitted composition must be unpublished, and must draw its inspiration from ideas of sport. Possibly the promoters feel that certain composers have already based their works on the Marathon run. But, once based, it may be a symphony, a musical drama, a chorus, or a song, as long as its running time does not exceed one hour.

Scores should be sent to the offices of the French Olympic committee, 20 Rue de Grammont, Paris, before Feb. 1, 1924. If orchestral, it should be accompanied by an arrangement for piano of two or four hands; if a song there must be a French translation of the text. All tempo indications should be in Italian. Of course, the composer's name, nationality, and address must accompany the score in any case. The Commission des Arts et Relations Exterieures will hold the manuscripts at the disposal of the contestants immediately after the conclusion of the Olympic games.

An international jury of personalities in art and sport, with composers in the majority, will make the awards, and a public performance, either in the stadium or a concert hall, will be given of the first prize winner. As prescribed by law, none of the scores sent to the contest may be played or reproduced without the written consent of their author.

One may confidently look for the Arts of the 100 Meter Dash and the Pole Vault Fugue. A Pentathlon Symphony would probably be quite stimulating.

Where D'Albert Got His Start.

There is one Chicagoan who is watching the approach of Eugene D'Albert's opera, "Die Toten Augen," an item in the repertoire of the Wagnerian Opera company, with more than common interest. She is Mrs. Fanny L. Thomson, who resides at the Scottish home in Riverside. She writes that her husband gave Eugene his first lessons in Mozart sonatas many years ago, and that she herself gave Frederick Lamond, the pianist, his Royal Academy of Music certificate at an examination in Glasgow in 1881. Mrs. Thomson claims in her personal acquaintance most of the musical celebrities, foreign and British, of that period.

The Wagnerian company tells of the final datings of its twenty-one performances here. The evening cycle of the "Ring" will take place Oct. 29 and 31 and Nov. 2 and 4. Afternoon performances of the same series will be given Nov. 6, 7, 8, and 10. D'Albert's opera will be sung on the evening of Nov. 1. Other Wagnerian works will be "Die Meistersinger," the opening performance, Oct. 23; "Tannhäuser," "The Flying Dutchman," "Tristan and Isolde," and "Lohengrin." The D'Albert work and Klenzi's "Evangelimann" are novelties; Strauss operettas, "Die Fledermaus" and "The Gypsy Baron," are practically the same as far as this generation is concerned; Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" and Halévy's "La Juive" will complete the list.

Here and There in Music.

Vacation evenings this year gave time for a reading of Carl Van Vechten's "The Blind Bow Boy." Van Vechten counts music among the experiences of his soul, and here is something for the truly elect:

"In the little balcony reserved for it the orchestra was tuning up, discordantly. Presently the leader lifted his baton, and the men began to perform Bunny's overture. It was a new kind of music, she told herself, contrapuntal jass, in which saxophones whistled and shrieked and groaned like hysterical schoolgirls telling lewd experiences, while the violins and double-bases vamped rhythmically. Flutes cried out in the tones of insane criminals. There was an indescribable clatter of tambourines, bones, triangles, castanets, gongs, drums, tomtoms, cowbells, cymbals, wood blocks, and rooster crows. Listening behind the folds of the silver curtain, Campaspe realised that at last she was hearing the music of the future. Ornstein, Prokofieff, Schönberg would sound, in comparison, like a minuet by Luigi Boccherini."

IN POLISH OPERA

A. J. LUKASZEWSKI—ROSA SASKOWSKA.
[Fuet Studio photo.]

This is a scene from Moniuszko's Polish opera, "Halka," which will be sung at the Auditorium tonight. The names of the characters are Jontek and Halka.

This May Not Look It, but It Is Poetry

tering about, doing a lot of things out, out, they'd SCORN to do in Kankakee.

Now Kankakee doth rhyme with tea—which makes my ending perfect—SEE?

At least, I hope you've the idea. If not, for pity's sake do not blame ME.

"Tea—With a Kick" made me what I am today. I hope—if you're not satisfied you'll take it out on the picture. It deserves it!

See you tomorrow.

Ask Me! Ask Me!

GEE: That's what I say, too!

AINA: The "opposite from secret"? "Tell the world." You're welcome.

SUZANNE: If I see her I'll tell her. Thanks for the other part of your letter, Suzanne!

ELIZABETH H.: Conway Tearle is 42 years old. He is the husband of Adele Rowland. United Studios, Los Angeles. Glad to be of service.

CHARLIE: So you're not "trying to be a star." Maybe you ARE. Her address is 5736 Lexington, Los Angeles. T'weekum.

ETCHIC: Just address your letter to William S. Hart, Paramount studios, Hollywood, Cal. He'll get it. What you going to write about?

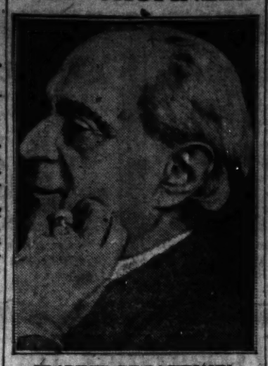
RUTH B.: Mighty glad to answer your query, and we'll see what we can do about the "roto." Myrtle Stedman may be reached if you address her in care of First National, Hollywood. Sorry—but I haven't any "pull."

L. J."S.: As we obtained our information direct from the company, perhaps this time you are mistaken. I do not attempt to copy names from the screen for fear I MIGHT be wrong. Thanks for your interest.

FLUFFY: Yeppy, I know. Mr. Navarro and Alice Terry can be reached at the Metro studios, Hollywood. Ralph Graves, Thomas Meighan, and Lila Lee receive their mail care of Paramount studios, Hollywood. Mr. Meighan is married to Frances Ring. That's the IDEA!

THEDA: It's not everybody who would stop in the midst of "mountains and mountains of work" to do something nice! You don't know how much good your letter did me. How was the trip to Yellowstone? SURE—I recognized the footprints! You stop this "and, and" stuff. Some day it might "take"—and that would be AWFUL, Theda! Write again soon—PLEASE!

THE 'CHOPINZEE'



VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN.
[Genry photo.]

James Gibbons Huneker, who loved hard names, used to call him the "Chopinzee," but the picture shows he has aged and mellowed since then. He will play a Chopin program at the Auditorium today.

KICK KORNER

Its Object—Objection

Dear Miss Tinée: This is my first attempt at entertaining the kick fans, but I will try to do my stuff so they won't be bored to tears, as I am at some letters.

I enjoyed "Six Days" very much, and I agree with you that it is an interesting picture. That dug-out stuff surely was thrilling, and one time while Corinne Griffith was "falling through space" the woman sitting next to me exclaimed, "My God! She caves in again!"

The only flaw I noticed was this: While Frank Mayo was stumbling around the chalk mine, on the sixth day, his shirt was dirty and ragged—in fact, there was nothing but shreds for sleeves—and later, when he walked into the hotel and met his mother he wore a soiled sculptor's jacket—but holes? O, no, not one! How come so?

People generally don't find sculptor's jackets waiting for them fifty or sixty feet underground, do they? I was under the impression they didn't. But, of course, he might have done it. All is possible in the movies.

I just want to add that I like your column very much and wouldn't think of missing it.

ONE OF THE K. K. FANS.

[Editor's note: Never been sixty feet underground, so don't know WHAT'S waiting.]

To the Rescue.

May, Dear: You have "The White Rose" all wrong as to location of filming. It was filmed at Fort Lauderdale, Fla., on the New river. We live at Los Olas beach, Fort Lauderdale, and are loyal to our town, so we want it to have credit for the lovely scenery. The Blue River inn is a residence on New river. This river is mostly fast deep in spots and the water hyacinth floats down from Lake Okeechobee to the sea, making one movie all the time.

MARY D.

Editors Note: A subtitle SAYS that the picture was filmed in the Bayou Teche country. That's where I got my information.

Howling in Glee.

Dear Miss Tinée: An item in THE TRIBUNE inspires me to yowl in unholy glee and then hope for the best. Peter B. Kyne, one of our best story tellers, has sued a company for so changing a story of his that the author did not recognize it, was ashamed of it, and feels injured by the perverted version—luring the public under false pretenses, and so on.

If he can collect a hundred thousand others should get millions for the butchery of their books.

Let's have a showdown on this! Goodness knows, most of us, if at all interested in a book, prefer to see it "as was," else we would not go at all. Even the glorious "Bright Shawl" was not improved by adding love interest to Hergesheimer's faultless novel.

You are right about the trimmings in first run houses. I avoid them unless especially invited. They're a bore.

All success to you and your corner.

FRANCESCA.

Notes of the Musicians

The Chicago Harmony chorus, Leslie St. John Westervelt, conductor, meets every Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock in the recital hall of the Columbia School of Music, 509 South Wabash avenue. There is room for new voices, especially tenors and basses. No previous experience or knowledge of sight reading is required. Application for membership may be made at 7:30 any Tuesday evening.

Mr. Stock and the symphony orchestra have not yet got into the season's run of novel and revolutionary music of which he expressed himself strongly in favor a week ago. This week's program follows the smooth path of the established repertoire, containing Mozart's "Magic Flute" Overture, Schubert's Tenth Symphony, which used to be called the one of "heavenly length" before Mr. Stock took the blue pencil to it. Dohnanyi's Suite, Op. 19, and the Brahms - Dvorak Hungarian Dances, 17-21. The "pop" on Thursday night will be only a trifle more familiar: Schubert's "Military March," Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony, Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnol," the "Scena Religieuse" from Massenet's "Les Erinnyes," and, as a forerunner to the coming German opera season, Strauss' "Die Fledermaus" Waltz.

The North End club sends word of European success attained by Marie Fanelli, a club protegée. Miss Fanelli has been gaining her musical education through the scholarship fund of the club for the last four years, one year here, the others in Italy. In July she sang the leading soprano rôles of "Il Trovatore," "Aïda," and "La Bohème" in several opera houses of Italy and Sicily in a manner which would seem to have been to the pleasure of press and public. The club plans to bring her to New York in the spring with the idea of trying out for the Metropolitan Opera company.

The Best Joke I Ever Heard

Twould Seem So.

"Mamma, is Georgie's papa dead?"

"Yes, dear."

"And is Susie's papa dead?"

"Yes, he is."

"And Tom's papa dead, too?"

"Yes, hush, dear."

"Well, papas don't last long, do they, mamma?" H. H.

A Man of Penetration.

The young author had just completed his first story. He took it to the post-office sealed, and asked how much postage would be necessary.

"Two cents an ounce," replied the postmaster. "That's first class matter."

"O, thank you, sir!" gushed the author. M. D.

To Be Sure.

Absent minded Prof. Smith had left his berth in the sleeper to find a drink of ice water and was hopelessly lost in the middle of the isle. It was about midnight and the train was speeding through the country.

"Don't you remember the number of your berth?" asked the conductor.

"I'm—er—afraid not," the the reply.

"Well, haven't you any idea where it was?"

"Why, no—oh, yes, to be sure." The professor brightened perceptibly. "I did notice at one time this afternoon that the windows looked out upon a little lake." M. N.

Harsh Words.

John McIlwain, lecturing on "Harmonic Evolution," delivers this bomb: "The Spartans let their children see the state of intoxicated persons in order to inculcate in them a horror of drunkenness. It is in that spirit that I give you the work of these modern composers."

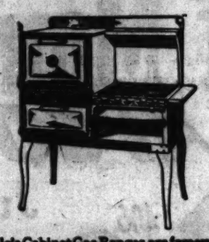
Save Enough Coal this Winter to Heat Your Home Next Winter

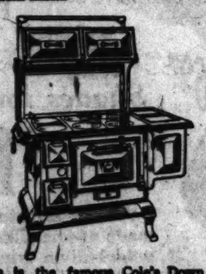
COLES Hot Blast Heater

Saves 1/3 to 1/2 in Fuel

Thousands of Cole's owners will heat their homes this winter with the coal they saved last winter. That's absolute proof that this wonderful stove saves 1/3 to 1/2 in fuel every year. With an ordinary under-draft stove, about 60 cents out of every dollar spent for fuel goes up the chimney in the form of gases, smoke and soot. Cole's Hot Blast gives you 100 cents worth of actual heat for every dollar you spend for fuel.



Cole's Cabinet Gas Ranges are famous for their beauty, their splendid baking and cooking and their gas economy. The oven is extra large and it can never rust, because it is lined with genuine aluminum fused iron. Made in full enamel, semi-enamel or plain finish.



This is the famous Cole's Down Draft Range, a lifetime investment in service and satisfaction. It gives you the same saving of 1/3 to 1/2 in fuel, and it insures perfect baking and cooking results at all times.

Burns Smoke and Gases Other Stoves Waste

Cole's patented Hot Blast Combustion burns the gases and smoke by mixing them with super-heated air and forcing them back upon the fire, where they are consumed. It burns 20 pounds of air to every pound of fuel. Air is free and fuel is expensive. This complete combustion not only saves fuel, it also gives you a cleaner, better heated home, with less ashes and a better circulation of warm air.

Saves Enough to Buy Things You Have Always Wanted

Cole's Hot Blast saves 1/4 to 1/3 in fuel every year. This saving amounts to enough to buy nice things you want. Or you can put it in the bank. This remarkable saving is absolutely guaranteed. Read this guarantee by the makers of this famous stove:

When our stoves are operated according to directions and connected to a good flue, we guarantee;

A saving of 1/4 in fuel over any lower draft stove of the same size, with soft coal, slack or lignite;

Cole's Hot Blast or Cole's Radiant to use less hard coal or coke for heating a given space than any base burner made with the same size firepot;

That the rooms can be heated from one to two hours each morning with fuel put in the stove the evening before;

That the stove will hold fire with hard or soft coal from Saturday night until Monday morning;

A uniform heat, day and night, with soft coal, hard coal, lignite or crushed coke;

Every stove to remain absolutely airtight as long as used; the feed door to be smoke and dustproof;

The anti-puffing draft to prevent puffing.

This guarantee makes it absolutely certain that this stove will do all these things. When you can get this great saving in fuel, with all these other important advantages, can you afford to buy any ordinary stove?

vacation at Sister Mildred's ranch in Puente. Mae's daughter, Mary, will accompany her. Mildred is the wife of Ygnacio Forster, and has quite a family of her own.

After that Miss Marsh will start forming her own company, using scenarios written by her husband, Louis Lee Arms.

Colleen Moore and her husband, John McCormack, have gone for a week's honeymoon in Grand canyon. Later there is to be an auspicious honeymoon—Europe and possibly Egypt.

Mary Pickford and Doug Fairbanks left for San Francisco over the week-end. There are to be some imposing scenes taken there for "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall." Lottie Pickford, Allan Forrest, and the rest of the cast left a week ago.

Mae Murray and her husband, Bob Leonard, went to the opening of Miss Murray's picture in San Francisco.

In telling of all the openings and first nights I don't believe I've mentioned "The Spanish Dancer," supposedly Pola Negri's picture, but it was hinted that her leading man, Antonio Moreno, stole the show.

Miss Negri received enough floral pieces to fill the lobby of the Rialto and overflow on to the walks. When she made her appearance she was literally pelted with bunches of violets.

Moreno received as many congratulations as Miss Negri. For the showing of the picture proved that to compare Mr. Moreno to Valentino is to compare Betelgeuse to Arcturus.

Solace in Vaudeville.

At least, Hollywood knows what Mary Miles Minter is going to do next. Mary has been domestic of late, cutting her finger washing dishes and writing diaries in true housewife manner. Now she is going into vaudeville, playing the eastern circuit.

The filmites have subscribed a half million dollars for a rustic site near Sunland which may become another Greenwich Village. A club house, a swimming pool, tennis courts, cabins, and other features are being prepared for the stars. Douglas MacLean, J. Warren Kerrigan, Lillian Leighton, and Fanchon Royer are on the advisory board. The subscribers call themselves the Rainbow Valley club. Who says there are no stars in the rainbow?

Bill Hart understands they are going to cut California into two states. The northern half will be California. The southern half Cafeteria.

Its Rightful Place.

Dear Miss Tinée: More power to your typewriter! Unless something is soon done in the way of restoring the feature picture to its rightful place on the theatrical bill of fare, we may as well make up our minds to become adherents of vaudeville, "melledrammer," and the other kindred arts of the speaking stage.

In giving us programs of music, art, vaudeville, etc., the owners of what are known as "presentation" theaters are not so liberal as they may seem. I have just returned from the east, and I find that the same groups of producers who control Chicago first run showings are also the dominating factors in other cities. This presentation thing is simply a club that is being used to curb or destroy the independent producers, while weak program pictures are being foisted on the smaller exhibitor and the movie fans via giddy presentations in lush cinema palaces.

Real pictures do not need a setting of grand opera, symphony music, and million dollar lighting effects to attract the attention of fans. Producers like Griffith, Sennett, Chaplin, Fairbanks, Lloyd, and the other real artists of the screen are not compelled to apologize to the Northwest Mounted police—or to any one else, for that matter.

The wishes and likes of the movie going public cut but little figure in the selection of pictures shown in the big city theaters. The producer-exhibitor alliance says, in effect: "You do not know what you like; we will select your picture, and your stars, for you!" A fine instance of the latter fact is found in the case of Valentino.

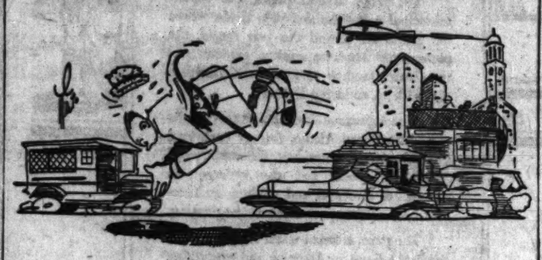
Slams of Life

By J. P. McEVOY

WATTA LIFE! WATTA LIFE!

Bewildered he stood and gazed
As the automobiles whizzed by,
And he tried to move but he couldn't move,
Even as you as I—
Trucks from the north and south,
Cars from the east and west. . . .
There he stood and his fluttering heart
Rat-a-tat-tatted his vest.

His pulses began to pound,
His eyes began to stare,
And frightened quivers ran up his spine
And curled his beautiful hair;



And a team bore down from the north
And a street car down from the south,
From the east a bus, from the west a truck,
And his heart came up in his mouth. . . .

Closer and closer they came,
And he looked at the lovely sky,
And wished with a wish that was more than a wish
He could flee like a bird and fly. . . .
Zowie! an airplane out of the blue
And diving like mad at his head!
With a cry of despair he looked all around
And dived through a manhole into the ground
In the path of the subway express—south bound—
And now he is happy . . . he's dead!

Warns Undertakers Against Newspapers

Funeral Directors in Conference Seeking to Suppress Exposure of Profiteering Shysters Are Cautioned

Alarmed by the swelling chorus of protests from victims of greedy and unscrupulous undertakers, a group of burial casket manufacturers, represented by Austin A. Breed, recently organized a national conference to consider whether or not it was advisable to take any action looking toward reform.

That burial caskets have been and are being sold by many conscienceless wretches at profits ranging from 300 to 500 per cent has long been known to everybody in the business. But it is only recently that the facts have reached the public, for the first time, through the campaign of publicity and exposure conducted by the Skeeles-Biddle Company through the columns of the big Chicago newspapers.

That this practice of chicanery, if continued, must eventually lead to municipalization of the burial industry and its control and operation as a public utility was predicted by one of the speakers at the conference, who is reported to have said:

Skeeles-Biddle Company FUNERAL DIRECTORS

"When evils have developed in an industry, which evils are to the detriment of the public, then action must be taken. If the industry does not bestir itself and clean house from the inside, then it need not flatter itself that it has avoided trouble. The public will bestir itself and do the housecleaning, during which process considerable mortification and financial loss may result to the members of the industry."

Only 150 invitations to the conference were sent out to undertakers from Colorado to the Atlantic Coast. The public may well wonder why a larger number were not invited. Is it possible that there are only 150 reputable and trustworthy undertakers in all that great territory and that all the other thousands were barred because of their reputations? Significant, in any avent, is the fact that of the 150 invited only 39 accepted and attended, indicating a lack of sympathy for and interest in the announced purpose of the meeting.

Skeeles-Biddle Company FUNERAL DIRECTORS

When we say that no representative of the Skeeles-Biddle Company was included in the list of those to whom invitations were sent the insincerity of those who planned the conference will be readily apparent. Many are saying that the conference would never have been called but for the powerful public sentiment that has been created by our single-handed crusade against the cheats and grafters infesting the undertaking business. Week by week we have been turning the searchlight of truth upon these scoundrels, until it was agreed that something had to be done. Some effort had to be made to stop us.

Farcical in the extreme were the further proceedings of this privately organized, personally conducted conference, so far as they have been permitted to leak out.

Skeeles-Biddle Company FUNERAL DIRECTORS

We are informed that the Chairman of the Public Relations Committee, at whose call the meeting was held, said in the course of his address:

*"Likewise, there is danger of allowing premature publicity to get into the newspapers regarding this effort of ours. * * * It would be a serious menace to the success of this movement if even one premature rumor were to disgust the country by indecent exposure of ill-formed or half-baked schemes for reform."*

Previously this same Austin A. Breed, in opening the conference, had stated distinctly that "no schemes for reform would be considered or discussed"—that the situation and the evidence would merely be reviewed. Could any mere discussion of the facts gathered be so "disgusting" and "indecent" as is the daily exploitation of the innocent and robbing of the poor that have been reported in our newspaper publicity campaign day by day for the past six months?

"Such publicity," Mr. Breed is quoted as adding, "would be widely copied and commented on, probably very unfairly, judging by the past. The wits would certainly hold us up to ridicule."

When and by whom have undertakers been criticized unfairly in the past? This is the sort of utterance that might be expected from one of those bandit undertakers whose illicit profit-taking has been hampered by our exposure of his evil practices.

But grasp, please, the full meaning of this remark by another speaker at this meeting of highly ethical funeral directors.

"You can take as big a profit as you wish by right methods."

In the name of the thousands of robbers, thieves and confidence men who crowd our prisons, by what methods that are right can any merchant take as big a profit as he wishes?

Skeeles-Biddle Company FUNERAL DIRECTORS

Is it any wonder that the Chairman of the Public Relations Committee, himself the organizer of this conference, recommended that no report of its proceedings be given out to the newspapers, but that all that was said and done be kept secret? What relief can the public hope for from such a thin-skinned, yellow-hearted band of pseudo-reformers?

And why is the public denied any information about the facts revealed to and discussed by them in their meeting? We hold it to be the duty of every undertaker who attended this three day meeting at the Hotel Gibson, Cincinnati, to share with his own clients and the people generally any knowledge he may have gained that would help to protect the people from the swindlers and fakirs who grow rich on the grief and sorrow of others.

Meanwhile the brief facts here given, which will not be disputed or denied, will clear from anybody's mind any suspicion that in our advertisements of the past six months we have stretched the truth. We stand ready and will be glad to prove, to Mr. Breed, his associates in this conference, or to any individual citizen, every charge we have made.

Skeeles-Biddle Company FUNERAL DIRECTORS

As a matter of fact no evidence could be more convincing than that to be had by comparing the plainly marked price tags attached to every burial casket in our big stock, with the prices asked by other undertakers.

THAT OTHER UNDERTAKERS CHARGE AS MUCH AS $350.00 AND MORE FOR THE SAME CASKET WE SELL FOR $150.00, THAT OUR $25.00 CASKET IS PRICED AS HIGH AS $85.00 ELSEWHERE—THESE ARE FACTS THAT CAN EASILY BE VERIFIED.

Nor do our clients save this big difference at the cost of service. No undertaker in the middle west is equipped to give better funeral service than ours, neither with respect to professional experience nor facilities. All funerals entrusted to our care are personally directed by a member of our firm. The use of either of our three large and beautiful chapels is free. A lady attendant is furnished without cost when desired. There is no charge for removals from any part of the city to either of our establishments. And we use only the finest class automobiles—not merely for some but for ALL our funerals.

Skeeles-Biddle Company FUNERAL DIRECTORS

THERE WILL NOT BE ANY HOUSECLEANING OF THE BURIAL INDUSTRY FROM THE INSIDE BY ANY SUCH STAR-CHAMBER METHODS AS THOSE REPRESENTED BY THE CONFERENCE WE HAVE DESCRIBED. OUR ONLY HOPE, AND YOURS, IS THAT THE PUBLIC WILL, THROUGH ITS ELECTED OFFICIALS, SOON SET ITSELF TO THE TASK OF FORCING THE REFORMS SO SORELY NEEDED. IN THE MEANTIME, WE WILL CONTINUE OUR LONE BATTLE AGAINST THE PIRATES AND VANDALS IN THIS CITY WHO ARE PREYING ON THE UNFORTUNATE AND SORROW-STRICKEN.

Our New NORTH SIDE Establishment

Now open, at 4437 Broadway, Skeeles-Biddle Company's chapel and mortuary No. 3—positively the most completely appointed and beautiful undertaking establishment in the middle west. We invite your inspection and a comparison of our low prices.

We make no charge for removals to any of our three beautiful chapels, the use of which costs you nothing. Our facilities for shipping funerals out of the city are exceptionally complete.

Cruising 'Round the World

With the AMERICAN EXPRESS on the New Cunarder FRANCONIA

Sailing from New York November 15th—from San Francisco December 4th.
Returning to New York March 27th.

30,000 Wonder Miles—133 Glorious Days

ALL the factors necessary to a wholly successful and delightful Cruise 'Round the World are present in an unusual degree in this coming American Express Cruise of the FRANCONIA. Experienced Cruise and Travel Management. The finest Cruise ship ever built. Just the right season of the year to go.

American Express Management: World travelers have long recognized the magical power and service of American Express in foreign lands. Its foreign offices have perfected arrangements for all shore excursions which their experienced personnel will carry thru. American Express has operated more than 500 Conducted Tours and specially chartered Cruises Around the World—in Europe, the Mediterranean, South America, West Indies, Hawaiian Islands, etc. American Express Travel Directors in charge of Cruises are all Travel experts with long and varied experience. A staff of 16 accompanies the FRANCONIA, all but 3 of whom have been around the world.

The new Cruising FRANCONIA: Latest and most modern of the splendid Cunarders—oil burning, built especially for long distance cruising, manned and managed by Cunard superior seamen.

Just the Right Season of the Year: Sailing westward, and in November—following the setting sun—brings the Franconia party to its most interesting lands when these lands are enjoying their short but delightful season. Especially is this true in the tropical Orient—the Philippines, Dutch East Indies, India and Egypt. Midday temperature will average about 71°. Excessive heat or cold and stormy weather at sea will be avoided most generally over the entire cruise. And who would not give up Christmas at home for the privilege of going Around the World at the proper season of the year.

More than 25 Ports of Call—with carefully planned shore excursions from each, included in initial cost—many special trips optional. Havana, Panama Canal, San Francisco, Hilo, Honolulu, Japan (13 days Yokohama, Kamakura, Tokyo, Kobe, Kyoto, Nikko, Inland Sea, Miyajima), Shanghai, Hongkong, Manila, Batavia, Singapore, Rangoon, Calcutta, Colombo, Bombay, Port Tewfik, Cairo, Naples, Monaco, Gibraltar.

A few of the most desirable staterooms are still available. Bookings already made indicate a party of exceptional interest and prominence from all states. Make reservations at once.

Illustrated booklet of Cruises with full itinerary, special trips, deck plans, prices, etc., on request.

A SOUTH SEA WELCOME

Feasts—War Dances—Song Festivals

for the Raymond-Whitcomb Round the World Cruise

WHEN they heard in the South Sea Islands that Raymond-Whitcomb would visit them next year, they sent us word of how they proposed to welcome us, mentioning—

A Fleet of War Canoes manned with stalwart fighting-men

Two Hundred Warriors in spectacular Fijian war-dances

A Great Feast
with every possible native delicacy.

The Ordeal by Fire
by the strange Beguan "fire-walkers"

A Native Song Festival composed of famous Tahitian "himines"

The Renowned "Siva-siva" performed by the most talented Samoans

THIS remarkable program—an experience any veteran traveler might envy—means that the members of our cruise will see (in addition to the natural glories) the most spectacular of the South Sea native customs. A splendid climax to a world-cruise that visits Egypt, India, Burma, the Philippines, China, Japan, etc. Sailing Eastbound from New York January 19, 1924.

Booklets for the cruise (or for our Mediterranean Cruise, sailing February 9) will be forwarded on request, as will our booklets describing our Tours Round the World, to South America, Japan-China, California, Mexico and Hawaii.

Autumn Does Its Best for Riders of North Shore

By Mme. X.

CERTAINLY the weather man has been doing handsomely by us lately. Anything more delicious than these recent autumn days, with their crisp air, soft sunshine, perfuming fragrance, and generally genial and friendly atmosphere, it would be hard to find. At least, this is the emotion evolved among those of the community who are lucky enough to be sojourning in the country or outskirts of the city.

The Lake Forest Hunt club has been especially energetic. Tuesday morning, before the hoar frost has melted on the tomato vines, many of its members are up and on horseback following the yelping pack across field and meadow, over fences and ditches and through the semi-leafless groves that dot this agricultural region with fluffy patches of thin, soft foliage.

Coffee, well made coffee, is always better than any nectar of Greek gods, for its flavor is rarest and most exquisite when it is drunk after an early morning's gallop following the hounds.

At the opening run of the season a week ago yesterday there were a couple of spills after the hunt was over which might have been worse than they were, but were bad enough to satisfy the unfortunate victims of circumstances and the laws of gravitation. William McCormick Blair's horse stumbled and threw him off so forcibly as to make a horrid rip in his upper lip, a rip that necessitated the surgeon's taking in his cheek twenty stitches, some of which were inside his mouth. Shortly afterward Volney Foster's horse, cantering over a stubby field, stumbled in a hole, capsizing both horse and rider and causing a serious bruise on the former's scalp. But such possibilities are what give this sport its fearful fascination, for both participants and onlookers, so they must be accepted as part of the game.

Among the devoted and energetic followers of the hounds are Mr. and Mrs. Volney Foster, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph T. Bowen Jr., Mr. and Mrs. John Andrews King, Mr. and Mrs. David Adler Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Austin Black, Mr. and Mrs. Prentiss L. Cromley, Mr. and Mrs. Donald M. Ryerson, Mr. and Mrs. James Minoeto, the Misses Mildred and Virginia Fitzhugh, Miss Eleanor Bradley, Miss Elisabeth Chase, Joseph T. Ryerson, Seaman Gifford, Robert A. Gardner, Francis J. Steeplechase at Onwentsia.

Next Saturday will be a great day at Lake Forest, for the annual steeplechase will be run on the Onwentsia grounds, beginning at 1:30 p. m. This year it is being made an international event, for the Canadians are joining in the race, three horses and their riders from Toronto competing with three from Detroit and three from Chicago. The trio, representing the Onwentsia Hunt club, will be Joseph T. Bowen Jr., James Breese, and Frank Bensall.

In all six races will be run, two steeplechases, one woman's flat race, a general free for all race (with a prize for the winner of $350), a jumping race, and a sixth whose characteristics I've forgotten. It will be an exciting and interesting event and one well worth attending. General admission is $1, with a charge of $15 for automobile stands, which charge includes admission for all occupants. The public is invited to attend, and between you and me and yon gatepost there are sure to be many thrills and possibly some spills before the day is over, an outlook which will attract the many and deter the few. If the day be fine there is nothing more delicious than to wander over those green fields of Onwentsia. The race course is laid out even better than it was a year ago, so that spectators can easily see it all from one stand.

Way Down in Mississippi.

Apropos of matters equine is the house and horse party which Mr. and Mrs. John Borden are giving this coming week at their place in Mississippi. The Chicago contingent of the thirty guests is leaving here tonight by train. Others of the party will join them, coming from New York, Detroit, and California. The company is composed almost entirely of people interested in polo, and the chief entertainment during the daylight hours will be polo matches. All of the guests are sending down their ponies, some shipping as many as five or six.

The Bordens' place accommodates all these and the thirty visitors with ease and comfort. Besides the main house there are other smaller houses. The county fair, which will be going on while they are there, will provide the company much entertainment, while every evening Mrs. Borden is giving a dinner party to which the neighboring residents will be invited. As the place is miles from any market, she has to take down everything that will be needed for the six days' feasting, an undertaking which might test the abilities of even the most experienced commissariat. Among the Chicago contingent are Mr. and Mrs. Earle Reynolds, Mr. and Mrs. Graham Grosvenor, Mr. and Mrs. George Seaverns Jr., Col. and Mrs. R. R. McCormick, Mr. and Mrs. James Breese, "Bud" Rader, William Mitchell Blair, and Prentiss Cooley.

Proud of Their Champion.

A proud colony is Lake Forest just now, especially the golfing section. It is not every day that the national championship in golf is captured by a member of a community. Miss Edith Cummings has grown up in Lake Forest, and her winning of the woman's national golf championship is considered a personal matter by most of her neighbors and fellow townsmen. Her father, D. Mark Cummings, is treading on air, because he taught her the game and is largely responsible for her brilliant victory last week at Rye, N. Y.

Miss Cummings is one of the prettiest and gayest of the younger set. In spite of which and in search of more serious occupation, she and Miss Eleanor Holden spent last winter together studying in Paris, only returning to this country in the early summer.

Motoring Leads All.

When all is said and done, however, the real American sport, the one in which we are pioneers and in which we are far ahead of any other nation, is motoring. It bowls one over to realize that the oft made statement that we have an automobile for every six inhabitants means, if it be true, that practically every one of us Americans can go joyriding at the same time if we want to, which some Sundays we seem to.

Here are a few facts from the latest number of the National Geographic magazine, facts which smote the writer's consciousness in a recent midnight reading hour when all the rest of "the Compound" was asleep (if lights out means sleep), and the stars were shining so brilliantly as to throw shadows of the apple trees on the dewy grass. The growth of the motor making industry in the last twenty-five years has, according to the writer of the Geographic article, William Joseph Showalter, "outrun the dreamers, confounded the prophets, and amazed the world. In 1898 there was one car in operation for every 13,000 people, each of them a hybrid creation secured by crossing a bicycle and a buggy."

Today, in order to accommodate at one time all the motor cars in this country, the Lincoln highway, which runs from the Hudson river to the Golden Gate and is 3,305 miles long, would have to be widened sufficiently to carry fifteen cars abreast in "traffic jam formation."

Almost Universal Ownership.

Though the annual demand for more cars exceeds 3,000,000 a year, there is as yet no sign of over production. Sixty billion dollars is the national income from registered automobiles. Except for food and clothes, it is the costliest item in our national bill of expenses, exceeding what is spent on railway transportation, shelter, heat, or light. Eleven out of thirteen motor vehicles in the world are operated on American roads, and of these twelve out of every thirteen are Yankee made. New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Maryland, with a combined population smaller than Poland, and with less territory than New Mexico, have more automobiles than all the rest of the world put together.

One item in this list of statistics is picturesquely striking. There are more cars stolen in a group of twenty-eight of our cities each year than are used in Austria, Belgium, Japan, or Mexico. This year's demand for new cars exceeds in number all those that were built from the beginning of the industry up to the year 1915.

There is no higher, sturdier rampart between this country and the destructive elements with which the rest of the civilized world is battling than this almost universal ownership of automobiles. Every important building under process of construction is surrounded by an impressive mass of parked cars, of every known make. These do not belong exclusively to the supervisors, the architects, the heads of the building forces. Most of them are the property of the workmen, who bring them from their homes to their places of work. Masons, carpenters, plumbers, et al., in other countries would be stunned at this proof of the widespread luxury. No wonder red radicalism has such a hard time to get a footing here. It is hard to get or keep a footing in a land where almost everybody rides.

Soviet Preserving Art.

The one ray of light in the reports of recently returned travelers who visited Russia is their accounts of the careful way in which the soviet government preserves and guards the art treasures of that stricken land. The famous collection of pictures and sculptures which was sheltered in the Hermitage gallery in Petrograd under the régime of the czars is not only kept intact, but has been added to and enriched by the spoils collected from the palaces of the rich and powerful which have been taken over by the soviet. The galleries are thrown open to the public every day, and trained explainers are there to show the works of art to those who flock there by the thousands.

The Russians of today are eager for education and grasp all opportunities to get it. They are also a naturally artistic race with an inborn love for music, art, and the drama. The present government has taken over the Moscow opera and it is run now for the benefit of the proletariat who fill the seats and boxes of one of the most beautiful opera houses in the world. Its interior is entirely gilt.

NEWS OF CHICAGO SOCIETY

with blue velvet hangings and upholstery. Where once sat the glittering nobility and aristocracy of Russia today crowd representatives of the many strange races who compose Russia. American visitors to whom I am indebted for the descriptions of conditions there say that the night they went to the opera in Moscow the great house was packed to the roof with the most extraordinary throng that ever was gathered in such a place. The people came in the only garments they had—workmen in their blouses, women in ragged, shapeless gowns, with dusters on their heads, some of them sitting in grand ducal loges and nursing their babies at their ample bosoms.

One opera box was filled with a group of twenty Cossacks all standing up, tightly crowded together, during the entire performance. The effluvia of the unwashed permeated the splendid interior. It was a remarkable and unforgettable scene. The opera that night was "Sneigurotchka" ("Snow Maiden"), which we saw here last winter. It was superbly given and was listened to with the profoundest attention and applauded with tremendous enthusiasm.

Some students of conditions in Russia lay this careful preservation of art treasures and opera to the fact that many of those in power today are of the Jewish race. Jews have a passion for such adornments of life and fine flowers of civilization which is not common among other nationalities. If this be so, hats off to them. Next to the Spanish picture gallery at Madrid the Hermitage is probably the finest of its kind in the world today. With the additions made by the present government it may even surpass the Spanish collection in size and beauty.

Grand Duke in Poverty.

Apropos of matters Russian, a Chicagoan who spent several weeks in Dinard and who knows the leaders and prominent people in that fashionable French seaside resort tells about the situation of the Grand Duke Cyril and his wife, who are at present living near Dinard. He would be the legitimate occupant to the Russian throne if the Romanoffs should be returned to power. He and his wife are today poor. If any one invites them to dinner or luncheon in Dinard he or she has to send an automobile for them, as they cannot afford even the taxi fare from the suburb where they live in a little cottage. In the same way at the bridge table, those who play with the royal Cyrils have to pay the latter's bridge losses. Whether the Cyrils collect their bridge winnings I don't remember. They are a pleasant couple and are popular among the gay folk of that cheerful resort.

Meanwhile, what is Russia's disaster is not an entire loss to the rest of us, for its culture and, above all, its great art are being spread over the earth as might not have happened without the revolution. Many musicians, painters, writers, and actors have been driven north to find their way in the outside world. We have in our opera troupe several Russian artists, including the great Chaliapin.

This afternoon Adolph Bolm, the Russian master of the ballet, is presenting his dance pupils in a performance at the Apollo theater under the auspices of the Friends of Opera. Also, a young pianist whose name sounds Slavic, Shura Cherkassy, is being presented by Herbert M. Johnson, recently returned as assistant to Samuel Insull in the management of our Civic Opera company. I'll give you a nickel if you'll tell me whether Shura is a woman or a man, and from what country.)

Paying Her Debts.

How wise we are all going to be some day if we remember all the things told us by the famous folk of the rest of the globe. Last Tuesday came that brilliant legal light and orator the Earl of Birkenhead, who spoke to a numerous company at Orchestra hall on the large subject of Europe today. The gist of his speech seemed to be that England was paying her debts and wanted those who owed her to do likewise. We venture to say that some of the latter in turn might pass the buck. One statement stood out clearly in the many things his lordship said, and that was that a man (or woman, too, for that matter) in England who had an income equal to $20,000 a year was taxed 55 per cent on it.

The English income tax is the largest and most burdensome of its kind in the world today. If Germany or France or Italy would impose similar taxes there would be less talk about reparations and national debts. These would be paid sooner. The entire savings of the British for the last 110 years, or since they began picking up after the destructive Napoleonic wars, have gone to pay their share in the world war expenses and will be wiped out long before the cost of this last conflict is settled. Lord Birkenhead's discourse was interesting, though given in a conversational manner which might have given some listeners the impression that his matter was not important. Only in the final few phrases did he give the impression of any striking oratorical powers. Then he struck the chords in a way that caused hearts to thrill and which made one realize why he is considered one of the finest speakers in England today.

Tomorrow those who belong to the Council of Foreign Relations are going to have an opportunity to hear one of the most remarkable and picturesque personalities in Europe today, Count Albert Apponyi of Hungary. He is remarkable both in appearance and history. For fifty-three years he has been a member of the Hungarian parliament. During his long service there he has always stood for the independence of his country and its rights to develop along ethnological lines—that is, to be self-governing and to follow the road of racial progress. He opposed the radical tempest which for a time threatened his country after the partition of the Austrian empire in 1919-'20. It was largely through his efforts that the leader of this movement (I've forgotten his name but not his works) was overthrown. Like many of the revolutionary agents who have battened in recent years on shattered Europe, he, this revolutionary leader, had lived many years in America.

Count Apponyi is a remarkable linguist, speaking fluently five languages with perfect ease and many others with scarcely less fluency. He is said to be an unusually charming man as well as a picturesque and interesting personality.

Intellectual Feast or Dissipation.

This autumn crop of traveling celebrities and returned notabilities of local renown makes a fine harvest for such an organization as the Council of Foreign Relations. Besides presenting the Hungarian patriot tomorrow at 12:30 luncheon at the Hotel La Salle and Dean Wigmore last Thursday at the same place, the council is to be addressed next Saturday by Miss Jane Addams at its midday luncheon. Miss Addams' subject is not yet announced, but probably will be about her travels. These midday meetings of the council are becoming more and more popular and worth while. They may in time rival a similar association in New York, where the attendance at these noon talkfests mounts up into the high hundreds.

Of course, the highest of high spots in this line of intellectual feast or dissipation (according as you take and digest it) is Lloyd George's visit here this midweek. It is safe to prophesy that there will not be a vacant seat in that big arena in Dexter pavilion next Wednesday evening when this great and famous British statesman steps out onto the platform. I hear that 40,000 more applications for seats have been received by those managing the affair than there is seating capacity in even this capacious place. Forty thousand is a pretty big figure, but it is asserted confidently as the number, and as that was several days ago so it is probably even bigger today.

Last Friday the first of the Symphony orchestra concerts was given at Orchestra hall. This is always the opening event of Chicago society's social season. This concert was a special occasion, as it was a memorial to the late Clyde Carr, who for years had been president of the board of trustees of the orchestral association. He was not only a stanch supporter and adherent of the association, but also was one of the most devoted attendants at the concerts, even during the final days of his life, when to go to them was a great physical effort.

Frederick Stock, the director of the concerts and leader of the orchestra, wrote last summer while he was supposedly resting at Weynhausen, in Westphalia, Germany, an elegy dedicated to Mr. Carr which was given in Friday for the first time. In it the composer tried to embody the personality of Mr. Carr, his love of all that was artistic and beautiful and serene; his splendid qualities as a citizen, his high ideals of personal character, and his gentle, friendly outlook on life. He and Mrs. Stock had been intimate friends for many years, so that the composer of the elegy had many opportunities to know the inmost thoughts of a man who stood on as high a plane as any citizen of Chicago in his ideals and aspirations for the welfare of the city as well as in his private life.

With the Travelers.

That restless conglomeration which we call Chicago society is full of plans and is as energetically hopping from place to place as the proverbial flea. Mrs. John W. Root, one of the gayest of the younger married set, suddenly decided to make a short visit to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Dudley, who have for a couple of years been living in Paris, so she packed up her frocks—and she wears pretty ones—and tucked her charming little daughter, Denise, under her arm, and departed last Monday, leaving John Root in possession of one of the most charming of the smaller apartments on the north side. She is going to be gone only until shortly after the first of next year, and may bring her mother back with her. Mrs. Dudley has many friends here who will welcome her if she should come.

Mrs. Joseph Winterbotham Jr., who has been living abroad for two years and a half, is now visiting Miss Mary Waller in the latter's home in River Forest. Miss Waller is giving a luncheon in her honor at the Casino today. Mrs. Winterbotham is planning to spend part of this coming winter in New York with her husband, who has a small flat there. Later they will both go to Paris, where Mrs. Winterbotham has a delightful apartment in Neuilly. Not far from her is Miss Edith Blair, who also has a little apartment in that part of Paris.

The second meeting of the box committee of the Friends of Opera will be held on Wednesday at Mrs. Rockefeller McCormick's Lake Shore drive mansion where, as on previous similar occasions, Mrs. McCormick will be hostess at luncheon. These luncheons are extremely interesting meetings, and at them are settled many matters of importance to the Civic opera.

Mr. Insull, the opera's deus ex machina, sailed for England last week, but expects to be back in time for the opening of the opera season on Thursday, Nov. 8. He thinks no more of going to England than you or I do of going around the corner of the street we live on.

Mrs. C. M. Ely is another wandering Chicagoan. She returned on Friday from spending the week in Cleveland, and leaves tomorrow for a sojourn in New York. She, too, plans to be back in Chicago in time for the opening of the opera season. After the first of the year she will go to Bermuda, where she has taken a house. She is expecting to start building her house in Lake Forest this autumn. For more than a decade she has been living in the two delightful little white cottages that flank each side of her entrance gates. More charming abodes it would be hard to find, but she has come to the point of thinking that a real house would better suit her ideas. Already there is a charming "tapis vert," or formal lawn, surrounded by a row of prim Wheatley elms to form a foreground for the front of the house. As Mrs. Ely has exquisite taste and many treasures in the way of furniture and "bibelots" the house when done is sure to be one of the most attractive in that region of beautiful homes.

McGann House Nears Completion.

The Robert McGanns' Georgian residence in Lake Forest is rapidly nearing completion. It is going to be one of the most effective of the fine houses out there. It is set in an unusually delightful garden with a mirroring lakelet surrounded by blossoming shrubs and flowers. Across the wide lawns and through the sheltering trees one gets glimpses of the blue lake not far away. The house itself is a stately and well proportioned stru-

All Tomorrow's Tag Day Proceeds Go to Children

By Kate Webber.

THE public will have its annual opportunity tomorrow to let its little gifts help unfortunate little ones in the city, for then the Chicago Children's Benefit league will have its sixteenth annual tag day.

Six thousand workers will be on the streets to ask from each pedestrian a negligible bit which, when collected, will run into six figures, the committee hopes, and which will be distributed among fifty-one charities, each indorsed by the Association of Commerce.

The activities of the league cover every phase of charitable work—nurseries, orphans' homes, children's hospital wards, home finding societies, and children's welfare work. Every charity desiring admittance to the league must bear the correct indorsement and must have an unpaid board of directors.

The only remuneration of any worker is the self-satisfaction of good work for a good purpose; all the moneys go directly to the charities collecting same.

The league is in every particular nonsectarian, nonracial, and nonpolitical. Its sole aim is to benefit the thousands of children in want, to give them advantages which to the average person are commonplaces, to provide them with the proper equipment for a fair start—in brief, to save them from moral, physical, and mental starvation.

Officers of the Chicago Children's Benefit league, which was incorporated in 1910, include Mrs. Ben E. Lawrence, president; Mrs. William C. Robinson, Mrs. Charles E. Frankenthal, and Mrs. Roderick Findlay, vice presidents; Mrs. F. E. Noble, recording secretary; Mrs. Howard Robertson, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. John W. Trainor, treasurer.

Gift Shop Is New Y. W. C. A. Feature

New classes, new clubs, new rooms, and a brand new gift shop are among the fall features at central branch, Y. W. C. A., 59 East Monroe street, which is now launching into its busiest season in room registry, employment bureau, gymnasium, swimming pool, education classes, and business girls' clubs.

The new gift shop, the plan by which Y. W. C. A. girls and committeewomen hope to earn money this year toward next year's budget, is called the Casement Window and has been built into an attractive corner of the fourth floor lounge. Miss Ruth Matz of Hubbard Woods is chairman of the window committee, while among those who have been busy planning, decorating, and laying in a stock of goods are Mrs. Arthur Tuttle, Miss Augusta Fenger, and Mrs. William F. Babcock of Winnetka. The shop will carry a line of pottery, brasses, embroideries, Russian brasses, and arts and crafts, as well as a more serviceable supply of middies, bloomers, hose, hair nets, and toilet articles for the consumption of Y. W. C. A. girls. All proceeds will go to the Y. W. C. A.

Nearly 1,000 young business women, most of them employed in loop stores and offices, have enrolled in study classes at central branch this fall, an increase of three hundred over last year's registration, according to Miss Anne Guthrie, general secretary.

"They are of all ages and types—the office girl who sees a chance for a better job if she will study bookkeeping or filing; the girl in domestic service who spends her Thursday afternoons at the Y learning to make herself a hat and dress; the foreign girl struggling in the mazes of the English language; the bride-to-be who is suddenly ambitious to study homemaking, or buying, or budgeting; the girl of little social opportunity who wants

CLUB ETHICS

By Maude Swalm Evans.

She had interesting material and she knew how to present it, but instead of talking for the twenty minutes alloted to her for the development of her phase of the subject she talked for over an hour—the length of time set aside for the entire program—disregarding utterly the rights of the two speakers who were to follow her on other and fully as important phases of the subject.

Again and again, at a natural stopping place, the chairman tried to tell her that her time was up, but after each pause she began anew by saying, "O, yes, there's just one thing more I want to tell you before I stop."

She left a tired and unresponsive audience for the second speaker to address. Some of the members of the club living in the suburbs had to go to their trains. The social chairman, a worried look on her face, walked back and forth in the rear of the room trying to appease the maids who were showing irritation at the delay in the serving of refreshments.

The third speaker was practically crowded off of the program. Realizing the lateness of the hour and feeling the tension, she illuminated her prepared talk with a few humorous remarks.

By overstepping her time, the first speaker not only showed a lack of consideration for her associates and for the program as a whole, but she also left a bad impression which would have been an unusually good one had she kept within her twenty minutes.

A Peep at the Newest IMPORTS at Leschin's for gifts—the most rare and precious things our buyers could find in Paris, Vienna, Berlin and Venice—jewelled feather fans, tortoise shell vanities, bags of inimitable design, lingerie and negligees of exquisite charm. . . .

BAGS

Bags of petit point, of Aubusson tapestry, steel beads on velvet or suede, marcasite and colored stone mounted, gold-inlaid tortoise shell, moire unadorned, or inset with petit point—some even fitted with dainty watches at $95.

MORE BAGS

Among the many, the eye singles out one of moire—the flat underarm style so smart now—with a castle scene reproduced in minutest detail in petit point, at $110.

AND THEN STILL MORE BAGS

Extra large tailored bags—almost a costume necessity—of moire, black and white striped, finished in flat belt-buckle style. Smartest of all, perhaps, Aubusson tapestry bags, very capacious, silver mounted. A moire bag as low as $12.50.

BRACELETS

"To make assurance doubly sure"—the assurance of being well groomed, a bracelet of white pearls with black pearls joined, or of seed pearls with onyx or sapphire buckles, and, perhaps, a first finger ring to match!

Picture yourself in one of these
NEGLIGEES

As elusive as moonbeams, yet snugly warm—some of them lined throughout with marabou, many of metallic brocades outside, all in the most engaging and alluring new models. One of the newest is of quilted Zinana cloth.

The "fairy"-est of
UNDERTHINGS

Cobwebby laces, sheerest of silks and chiffons, embroideries and other handwork inimitably French—this is the new import underwear.

NEW GOWNS
NEW TEDDIES
NEW 2-PIECE SETS
NEW SLIPS

Tantalizingly different and altogether lovely—the Leschin importations elicit only "ahs" and "ohs" of almost speechless admiration from the salespeople, accustomed even as they are to lovely things.

Quite the most Parisienne of garments for the bride-to-be, to wear at breakfast with him, has an underslip and jacket of white georgette with bands of coral georgette and inserts of lace. Ravishingly beautiful!

PERFUMES

That subtle note—to complete the harmony of perfect grooming—perfume, faintly reminiscent of other things.—.—.—.

FANS

Jewel dipped feather fans, silver stenciled on feathers, feathers flat and feathers ostrich, large fans and then even larger—every color, and often the handle of tortoise. $15 up.

HEAD BANDS

Coronets, straight bands, ornate bands so many styles and all indispensable for evening—silver cloth, jewel-buckled, brilliants on maline, the crushed Hindoo Turban, richly ornamented—the choice is intoxicating and bewildering. $5 up.

NOVELTY LIGHTS

Boudoir splendor further enhanced by the newest of boudoir lamps. Tiny shells so delicately tinted as to resemble flower petals. Orchid, rose, peach or blue in three-light, bedside or dressing table models. $5 up.

VANITIES

Tortoise shell, cloisonne, galalith—some with three heavy silk tassels concealing lip stick, eyebrow pencil and perfume container. Some have lipstick and powder-mirror combination.

How To Keep A Child Healthy

A GENERATION ago parents thought that sickness was a part of a child's life, but we know better now. The secret is in the food the mother allows the child to eat, and in watching that elimination occurs regularly two or three times a day. Mrs. J. Russell of 19,141 Havana Ave., Detroit, Mich., keeps her family of two young children in perfect health with Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and Mrs. R. L. Smith of 519 Maple Ave., East Pittsburg, Pa., says her family of three children have never been sick a day since giving them Syrup Pepsin.

A Substitute for Physics

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a scientific compound of Egyptian senna with pepsin and suitable aromatics. The formula is on every package. You will find you do not have to force children to take it, and it is much better for them than castor oil, calomel or coal-tar drugs like phenolphthalein even if covered with sugar or chocolate. Syrup Pepsin is mild and gentle in action and your child will have an easy passage without griping or strain. It does not contain narcotics, and you can give it with absolute safety to an infant at the breast.

"Magic" in a Teaspoonful

Every store that sells medicines sells Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and the cost is less than a cent a dose. Give half a teaspoonful to any ailing baby or child at night when you put it to bed and you will find a happy, laughing youngster in the morning. Take Syrup Pepsin yourself when constipated, and give it to any member of the family young or old, for any ailment due to constipation, such as biliousness, headache, lack of appetite, sleeplessness, bad breath, cankers, fever sores, indigestion, and to break up fevers and colds. Stop that first sneeze or sniffle and you will have a healthy winter.

Corsets Again Rule the Fashions of The Day and "Nemo" Leads the Way

Third Floor—Dearborn Street

The renaissance of the corset has arrived; daintiness and good taste are again urgent notes in fashion. All well-groomed women are re-emerging, for they found that discarding the corset has made them stouter—service in correct corseting is the outstanding need of women today and that service must include not only fitting service by skilled corsetieres, in which we specialize, but also a complete variety of styles and sizes in both corsets and brassieres. Let our corsetieres advise you in making selections without extra charge. In recognition of this fact we are featuring the Fall models "Nemo Corsets" and cordially invite every woman to visit our corset section and inspect the Nemo models and learn at first hand the true value of

Correct Corseting

Nemo Diafram-Reducing Corset, Style 955—the corset many women have been waiting for—it takes wonderful care of large hips and thighs—but the real feature of this corset is that it covers, shapes and reduces that ugly flesh that accumulated over the diaphram and which up to now has been very hard to reduce. Flesh color. Six hose supporters. Sizes up to 40, at $9

Nemo Diafram-Reducing Corset, style 610—for the average figure—especially good for the girl that sits at her desk all day—if she has that bulge of flesh—it will reduce it—if not—the diaphragm belt will prevent its developing—but a wonderful feature of this corset is that it has a hook at top of front steel—that as a girl bends over typewriter or desk the top of the corset bends with her and does not "gouge in"; flesh color. Six hose supporters attached. Why don't you plan to see it tomorrow? Sizes to 36 ..... $7

New Diafram-Reducing Corsets at $5 and up to $12

Self-Reducing Corsets at $3 and up to $13

Nemo closed back corsets. They'll be of interest to women who wear a girdle corset—Style 549; section of elastic in skirt, set low on the figure, as low as a petticoat; fits snug around the waist, is not tight, and does not bind. Sizes up to 36. Very special for tomorrow at 5.00

Circlet Brassieres

Made by the Nemo factories. They do for the figure above the waistline what the famous Nemo corsets do for the figure below the waistline.

The Nemo Circlet brassiere reduces the figure, flattens the bust, gives a flat back—especially over the shoulderblades—where it smoothes out the flesh.

With this new and entirely different brassiere it is impossible to have anything but a smooth, unbroken line from shoulder to hip. No hooks, no eyes, no buttons. Sizes 34 to 48; at 1.00, 1.50 and 2.50

ture, suggestive of the best that has been done in architecture in this country and England. To use slang, it has "class" as well as beauty. I believe the McGanns expect to get into it soon. For a couple of summers they have been occupying their garage.

Why do you suppose a garage makes such a delectable dwelling? It is seldom that a really truly house is quite as picturesque and alluring as a garage or even a stable turned into a house. For one thing a garage provides for its occupants one spacious room, a room large enough to be used at one end for a sitting room and at the other for a dining room and this with no crowding. This is always attractive giving, as it does, an impression of hospitality and of a large and generous way of living. Then in a garage house there are no terrifying grandeurs, no sumptuous Italian fireplaces, no ancient and richly carved beams and doors, no marble stairways, no tessalated pavements, no glittering crystal chandeliers. Even old Italian furniture and age-dimmed Dutch tapestries have a homelike air when adorning a garage drawing room or a reconstructed stable living room.

All of which goes to show that the spending of much money and the owning of rare art treasures do not always insure a homelike and inviting interior. Like other good and desirable things this cannot be bought but might almost be called a gift of God. Such a home expresses the soul of the person who created it.

WHAT MAKES A BEAUTIFUL WOMAN?

Orazula.

By Selby Maxwell.

SHE LIKES TO TRAVEL.

WHAT kind of women like to wear khaki and go on hikes and camping trips? Did you ever see a girl dressed for roughing it who was not of Nordic blood? The chances are great that you never did. Other breeds simply do not do it.

Nordics have not yet gotten the spirit of the old Aryan ox cart out of their hearts. It may have rubber tires now and run on gasoline, but otherwise everything is unchanged, and if our ancestors of five thousand years could come back to earth, they would get the spirit of the auto tourist perfectly. In fact, Nordics were the original tourists. Their travels were not always peaceful, for they had a faculty for taking such lands they passed as struck their fancy. This is why this race is the ruler class all over Europe today and has taken America from the red Indians in next to no time at all, geologically speaking.

Orazula is Nordic. Look at her. She has a long skull and a long face, with reddish hair and blue eyes. She is of the pure adventuring type. Every woman who looks like her will like to go, and will not be too particular about the means, so long as the journey is done.

Orazula comes from old Nordic stock. Her father has moved every year since she was born, and he has lived in eight towns in twenty-two years. It is the same restlessness that sent the Anglo-Saxons ever into England, and our fathers to America. Orazula has traveled herself. She has crossed the continent twice, with her own money, just to see what the country is like.

In order to understand a Nordic beauty, you must comprehend that restlessness and love of freedom dominate her entire mind. Whatever Orazula does is colored by her preference for change.

Some critics say that Nordic women are stupid, and lack refinement. Such accusations are far from the truth. Nordic culture is different, admittedly, but it has a rugged beauty that reflects the power of Nordic soul. Go into any farm house, for most farmers are Nordic, and there you will see pictures that are cherished as almost sacred. The furnishings of the parlor will be consistent. The halls will have a certain look, and even a certain smell, so that anyone, coming in for the first time, and not seeing the owners, can tell that he is in a Nordic abode.

Orazula has an ectrospective mind. Her thoughts look outward. She does not see herself, but only externals. She thinks of herself in the third person. She is naïve. Learn to appreciate her type, for she is beautiful.

for a customer. Ask for one with Tribune Want Ads and you will find many of them. Mrs. H. Frost, 3221 Warren Av., asked for a renter for her flat through a Tribune Want Ad, which appeared Aug. 19:

TO RENT—3221 WARREN-AV., SD, 8 rm. flat; furn. opt.; 5 rms. rented; good income; steam & electric; nr. Garfield Pk.

She found a renter. She says: "I rented the flat the first day. There were at least 30 people who called in answer to my Tribune Want Ad."

You are wasting time and money if you let a flat stand unoccupied for lack of Tribune advertising. You pay for the best when you advertise. Call Central 0100 and you get the best.

Voice of the Movie Fan

Old and New.

Dear Miss Tinée: I have always believed the original "The Spoilers" the greatest film ever produced. I saw it three times, therefore should be able to contrast it with the new version.

The new film is just as good, with one exception—Cherry Malotte. Miss Williams gave the part a sincerity that, unfortunately, Miss Nilsson cannot impart. Miss Nilsson is undeniably lovely, but doesn't quite put it over.

The fight is a pippin, and Sills and Beery are excellent, as usual. Dextry is not quite the lovable old chap of the original, but Ford Sterling surely is a comical cuss as Flapjack.

But, in conclusion, let me repeat, Kathlyn Williams as Cherry Malotte can never be supplanted in the movie affections of SHE JAY.

Dear Miss Tinée: Boy, did I see a picture yesterday! It sure was great. Usually I go to see a picture because a certain star I like plays in it, but this time I went on your recommendation (through your review, of course). And I am here to tell you I was glad I did go.

I think Mary Philbin's acting was simply marvelous, superb, etc. She is sympathetic and beautiful and that's saying something when you think of the old-fashioned clothes she wore. Well, I know one little girl that is going to be one of our foremost stars, and soon at that.

Norman Kerry played his part to perfection. He was the count to a T—looks, manners, bearing, n'everything. And he certainly is one of the best looking heroes I've seen in some time. C. F.

ART

Bringing Beauty to Children in the Schoolroom

By Eleanor Jewett.

WE have in our midst an organization which is doing much good with little talk. It is almost a question of chance as to whether or not you have ever heard even its name. Notwithstanding this modest attitude toward the public, it is the public which this society befriends.

Befriends is a poor word. Better would it be to say that this organization brings beauty, freedom of the imagination, color, and promise to the generations of our daily increasing public, which it allies itself with in our best civic centers, the public schools.

The Chicago Public School Art society, to give it its full title, is the oldest auxiliary of the Chicago Woman's club. It was formed just after the World's Fair. Having enjoyed the wonder of those buildings and the beauty of the treasures they sheltered, the women of Chicago decided that a heritage of comprehension of the beautiful should be the privilege of every man and woman. To ensure this privilege the child must first be considered. Taste must be acquired, or at least the foundation of it laid, in youth. The best approach to childhood en masse is found in the schools. So was this society formed, the only organization ever conceived with the single purpose of bringing beauty to school children.

The Chicago Public School Art society owns today a collection of approximately sixty-five original oil paintings. Some of these have come as gifts, others are from the Art institute Chicago artists' exhibits, the rest have been purchased. Among those who have given pictures are Edward B. Butler, Alson Clark, and Wallace L. De Wolf. Wilson Irvine also has given paintings. This artist makes it a practice to give a picture to each school which any child of his attends. As Mr. Irvine is one of our most talented painters, this means a great deal.

Each year the society gets the following prize winning paintings from the exhibition by Artists of Chicago and vicinity, held each spring at the institute: The E. B. Butler prize ($200); the Mrs. Julius Rosenwald prize ($200); the Fine Arts Building prize ($500), and two of the Charles S. Peterson Purchase prize pictures ($500 each).

In addition to the paintings, the society has many colored prints. The prints are really beautiful. Great care is taken in their selection. In subject they must appeal to children and in color they must please the eye. In size they must be of generous proportions. No little child can be expected to appreciate detail. The spirit of the composition is the thing that captures their attention. For example, in a kindergarten room a picture of two little children playing on a beach was hung. In a few minutes one tiny tot stood up, held her skirts high, and began to tiptoe about the room. The picture spirit had caught her. She, too, was wading; the hardwood floor was sand; waves were threatening—hence the lifted skirts—the schoolroom was a sunny beach. After a minute or so the entire room of children was in line, following her, each one wading carefully, so as not to wet rompers or dresses—the power of the imagination!

Of the oil paintings, fifteen or sixteen make a group, and a group is hung for a year in a school before it is transferred. About thirty prints make a group, and they also are given to a school for a year. Many pictures as the society has, they need more. The society has issued these questions. Think about them a minute:

Do you know that Chicago has 300 public schools, and 8,000 classrooms, many of them with bare walls?

Do you realize that the 475,000 children who sit in these rooms are hungry for beautiful things in their environment?

Do you know that the Chicago Public School Art society is the only organization from which these children may

Do you know that Chicago has 300 public schools, and 8,000 classrooms, many of them with bare walls?

Do you realize that the 475,000 children who sit in these rooms are hungry for beautiful things in their environment?

Do you know that the Chicago Public School Art society is the only organization from which these children may expect to receive a beautiful picture to hang on the schoolroom wall?

"The Open Gate," by Karl Ouren. Mr. Ouren's exhibition at the Palette and Chisel club is their first show of the season, and an excellent introduction to the winter it is. This painting is perhaps the most beautiful in the exhibit. Several others, however, run it a close second, and the group, as a whole, commands the keenest appreciation.

The society is exhibiting a number of its paintings in room 500 of the Fine Arts building in order to stimulate public interest. Among the pictures are canvases by some of our best known painters. Lucie Hartrath is represented by "Leafy Screen"; Pauline Palmer by her "The Sketch Class"; "Taos Town," by Victor Higgins, is there; other pictures are "The Windmill," by William Ripp; "Wild Rose Inn," by Karl Buehr; "Beach Woods," by Edgar Cameron; "Autumn," by C. Meyer; "Geese," by Jessie Arms Botke; "Early Morning, Michigan Avenue," by James R. Perry, a member of the Business Men's Art club, and "The Willow," by Frank V. Dudley.

The society has these pictures, but it needs more. It is hoped that this year and the coming years will see an increased membership, signifying greater general interest, and an increased number of pictures, signifying greater potential help to our children. It is the children who will carry out our plan for a Chicago beautiful, and to insure their wise help when the time comes we must give them now a training in distinguishing between beauty and near-beauty. Taste must be developed. Pictures can do this. Will you help give them the pictures?

There opened last Tuesday in Gunsaulus hall of the Art institute an exhibit of wall papers, printed and hand colored, in the shape of panels. For the most part the papers are of French design, and the patterns are large. Some of the papers show landscapes, some have figures; some depict the conventional Japanese cherry blossoms or have exotic long tailed birds, or Chinese landscape effects; and still another group show the luxurious designs conceived in France, with roses and Cupid's bowers entwined. The various panels come from the collections of Mrs. Lawrence Armour, Mrs. Noble B. Judah, Mrs. Joseph Cudahy, David Adler, and Charles Schmitt. The exhibit will remain on view until the middle of November.

The Sunday afternoon concerts which have been given in Fullerton hall, Art institute, for the last few years will be resumed this afternoon and continue until April 27, 1924. The same Art Institute ensemble, under the direction of George Dasch, composed of members of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, has been engaged for these concerts. They will be given at 3 o'clock and 4:15 o'clock every Sunday afternoon. A slight admission fee of 15 cents is asked.

Beginning this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, Lorado Taft will commence his series of popular talks on sculpture in Fullerton hall of the Art institute. These talks are free to the public, and though it was feared the hour at which they are given would prevent a large attendance, Mr. Taft spoke to an overflowing audience at every lecture last season.

At 4 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, in Fullerton hall, members of the Chicago Symphony orchestra will give a concert.

On Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock, in Fullerton hall, Lorado Taft will lecture on "Phidias and the Parthenon."

On the afternoon of Oct. 23, Jessica Penn Evans will give a series of pantomimic dances, in costume, in Fullerton hall, at 4 o'clock.

News has been received that the Arts club will have its quarters this year on the third floor of the new London Guarantee and Accident building, at 360 North Michigan avenue. The opening of the rooms will be delayed until the end of November. The Arts club exhibitions give such spice to the round of exhibits Chicago has each year that this opening will be awaited eagerly.

Dorothy Vinju Anderson has an attractive exhibit of paintings at a downtown gallery this month. The pictures have charm and delicacy. They are like bits of dreams woven into color. Fancy and fantasy are their parents. A silver mist veils them, and the nymphs that dance in her forest glades are all from Titania's court of beauty. The one foster child, a beach scene, is not particularly successful. There is something odd about the water.

Morris Topchevsky of Hull House has an interesting exhibit of studies of Chicago's ghetto at the Walden book shop.

Philadelphia Plans for Civic Opera

The Philadelphia Civic Opera company is a new enterprise, organized under the presidency of Mrs. Henry M. Tracy and having among its directors Henry G. Thunder and Henri Scott. The latter used to sing bass rôles at the Chicago opera. The plan is to have a limited number of professional singers take part with amateurs, both as principals and in the ensemble. If a dozen operas are presented, says the Ledger, the performances in all will number sixteen or eighteen, ranging from "Faust" to "Hansel and Gretel."

Rudolf Thomas, who has conducted at Hamburg, has already been working for two months with the chorus of 125. The training of these volunteers will be in effect an opera school for persons who might not otherwise be put in the way of a musical education.

And here, at the season's beginning, are four thousand yards of a superb quality of All-silk Velvet, bought by us by cable, at our own price, from the largest makers of fine Velvets in Europe. While we never quote comparative values, it is only fair to say that at 6.95 a yard these Velvets are about HALF their usual price elsewhere today—an opportunity that will hardly be duplicated this season.

The Velvet is in both chiffon and erect pile finish, and a wonderful range of the newest colors. The gorgeous blues—sapphire and national—the rich new brown and tan shades, are all here—and plenty of black. Here is the full list:

Gulbransen Trade Mark, "Easy to Play"

At These Stores, Investigate the Gulbransen at $495

Forty-two substantial, reliable merchants and thousands of owners in Chicago confirm your judgment when you choose a Gulbransen Registering Piano.

Among the merchants selling the Gulbransen (stores shown above) are a number formerly connected with the mechanical end of piano manufacture. They know quality.

Others were tuners and service men. They know what instrument stands up under hard usage.

Others were professional musicians. They know music.

All of them have chosen the Gulbransen as the leading instrument of its type. They recommend it to you, and give added force and prestige to our own guaranty protection.

Every Gulbransen has its selling price plainly branded in the back at the factory—no guesswork as to price or value. A "good buy" at any time—because it is honestly priced and sold at the lowest, bed-rock figures at which quality can be bought. Never sold on a fictitious price-reduction basis.

Every Gulbransen is furnished with four simple and exclusive Instruction Rolls. Every Gulbransen is "Easy to Play"—easy to play correctly, and with the individuality and expression that belong to good music.

Visit any one of the stores listed on this page and put your feet on the pedals of a Gulbransen.

Ask to see the Suburban Model—$495—an average-priced instrument. There are three other Gulbransens—$600, $700, and one priced as low as $420!

But make your test on the Suburban—a handsome, full-toned, high-class Registering Piano that brings all the world's famous music and the popular hits of the day into your home, for you to play.

Furnished complete with four Gulbransen Instruction Rolls for $495 cash—or on an easy payment basis that the dealer will gladly explain.

At Main Store:

MARMON TOURING, 1922. Marmon body design has changed but little since 1919, and for this reason Marmons do not look old-fashioned after 1, 2, or 3 years of service. This particular car is in such condition that even an expert could not distinguish it from new in any particular; has been through our shops, thoroughly renewed and refinished in Mist o' Marne, is guaranteed, and the equipment consists of new cord tires, bumper, mohair spare tire, visor, and can be bought for $858 cash; balance easy terms.

This car received from the original owner in excellent running condition, and required only a few minor adjustments. It is equipped with 5 practically new cord tires, painted a bright canary yellow, and is ready for any service that may be required of it. Down payment, $704; balance easy terms.

MARMON 7 PASS. TOURING, 1918 MODEL. This is one of our standard 7 passenger touring cars that is in very good running condition throughout. It is in the finest possible condition throughout, painted the new vermilion, and is one of the most attractive models we have ever shown. To one who desires sturdiness, comfort, and low upkeep expenses, here is your opportunity. Terms as low as $396 cash, balance in small payments.

HUPMOBILE TOURING, 1922 MODEL. A Hupmobile that is up to date, renewed and overhauled such as this car has should give the purchaser as much service as a new car; is painted our standard blue and equipped with practically new cord tires, bumper, motometer, etc.; is very attractive in appearance and can be counted upon for many years of hard usage. Terms: $352 cash, balance easy.

They are free from any annoying adjustments and constant tuning-up. This car is in such condition that we will gladly recommend it to any one requiring a car for business; is in first class condition, painted, and has 5 excellent cord tires. $264 cash, balance easy terms.

CADILLAC SEDAN, MODEL 55-J. One of the old reliable sturdy kind that you can absolutely depend upon; has just been turned in to us, and is good for many thousands of miles. Why this difference?

THE CHICAGO DAILY TRIBUNE long had the largest circulation of any morning daily in America. Only recently has it been surpassed by its offspring—The Daily News of New York. Notwithstanding this enormous circulation of The Daily Tribune you will note from the figures opposite that The Sunday Tribune sells more than three hundred thousand additional copies.

Why do the people of Chicago and the Chicago territory buy 60% more Tribunes on Sundays than on week days and pay so much more per copy for them?

A common answer is that more people have time for reading on Sunday and every one has time for more reading.

That this does not tell the whole story is evidenced by the fact that Tribune circulation does not jump by hundreds of thousands on holidays when people have the same extra leisure. The multitudes buy The Sunday Tribune because they definitely want The Sunday Tribune.

WHY do they want it?

The Tribune carries practically the same classes of news on Sundays as on week days. It carries the same features in somewhat more voluminous form. It carries vastly more advertising.

Of course many people buy The Sunday Tribune for its great volume of money-saving advertising, but this does not account for the tremendous increase.

One more factor must be considered—
The Coloroto Magazine

Careful analysis shows that the one great feature distinguishing The Daily Tribune from The Sunday Tribune from the standpoint of the reader is The Coloroto Magazine. This magazine—tabloid size—containing news pictures in sepia and green—Blue Ribbon Fiction, illustrated in color—ads in both—all printed on unique rotogravure presses invented by The Tribune—this magazine has been the backbone of recent campaigns for Chicago Sunday Tribune.

"Let's Go!"

Gone for good—

that in-the-dishpan look—

The new way to wash dishes won't roughen or redden hands

IT'S what you have always wanted for washing dishes. Something to do them quickly, easily, without making your hands rough and red. Something to relieve that three times a day, day-in, day-out, task of its drudgery.

And now—here it is—Lux for washing dishes. So natural, too—you wonder it wasn't thought of before. Of course if you could wash fine fabrics with it so safely, it couldn't harm your hands.

As easy on hands as fine toilet soap

The chiffon-thin outer skin of your hands is softer and finer than almost any known material. Yet an hour and a half every day it is subjected to harsh soap suds in your dishpan!

That is why your hands chap so easily—become dry and rough. For so-called kitchen soap robs your skin of the oils so necessary to its well-being and good looks.

To keep your hands soft and smooth Nature cleverly arranged little oil pockets—millions of them—just beneath the surface of the skin. They feed the skin—give it the satiny texture that makes it the pleasantest thing in the world to touch. When these oil pockets are drained dry by harsh, alkaline soap the hands become rough and red.

Three times every day you can wash your dishes with Lux without fear of drying these important oils. The pure flakes help keep the supply constant. Lux is gentle—it rids your hands for good of that telltale dishpan look. Even fine toilet soap is no easier on your hands than Lux suds.

Only one teaspoonful to a dishpan!

It is hard to believe—but try it for yourself. Just toss a single teaspoonful of Lux into your dishpan. Notice how these tissue-thin flakes melt into suds the very instant the hot water touches them.

One teaspoonful washes your breakfast or lunch dishes—for your dinner dishes you may need two teaspoonfuls; even so, the regular size package lasts for 54 dishwashings. And now there is a big new package that will do 135 dishwashings!

The difference it makes in your dishes

No matter how clean and sparkling they are—your silver, your glasses—all your dishes—you will notice a real difference when you use Lux.

Just a swish of your dishmop in these gentle suds—and out come your dishes with never a soapy streak to mar their lustre, never a cloud to mar their brilliance.

Don't put up with that hour and a half coarsening of your hands every day. Wash your dishes with Lux. Keep a package handy on your kitchen shelf. Lever Bros. Co., Cambridge, Mass.

Just one teaspoonful makes the water soapy all through

THE Chicago Tribune hundred thousand dollar architectural competition is unique in that for the first time the design for a privately owned office was chosen in a prize competition open to the world. The architects of twenty-three countries gave to Chicago new and bold treatment of the theme of the skyscraper—one that is to make architectural history for generations to come.

The Tower Book

As a permanent compendium of this, the greatest architectural contest of all time, The Chicago Tribune has published a 600 page volume which contains not only all the designs received but the program which was furnished to competitors, along with all material used in inaugurating the contest, the report of the jury of award, biographies of the winners, architects who submitted designs, twenty-five views of the three prize winning designs and a reproduction of the magnificent perspective drawing of the 260 other designs received.

An Architectural Encyclopedia

IN "Tribune Tower Competition" are present the genius, the experience, the ingenuity of the architects of twenty-three nations, making it a veritable encyclopedia of skyscraper design—the first book of its kind. It contains two hundred and sixty different solutions of one architectural problem, presenting an array of designs, in amazing variation, of the highest artistry. A study of this book is bound to result in a definite understanding of the enormous potentialities of the skyscraper.

"Chicago Beautiful" is every Chicagoan's earnest wish,—but only when each has within himself the power to appreciate skyscraper design, in a constructive, helpful way, will it be possible for the city to attain its ideal of civic beauty. Now, for the first time, the people themselves, the daily residents of the skyscraper, have an opportunity to study its design. The book that holds this opportunity is for sale at the booksstores listed on this page at less than the cost of production. Or use the coupon! We advise quick action as the edition was too expensive to be large.

How to get the real old Southern flavor in your baking

THOSE old-fashioned Southern dishes—gingerbread, cookies, 'lasses pie, fruit cake—how far their fame has spread!

The famous recipes from which they were made, copied carefully, passed along from one expert cook to another. But the flavor was never the same—the celebrated "plantation flavor" could not be duplicated. That had come from something all the recipes called for, which had practically gone out of existence for years—old-fashioned plantation-made molasses.

In vain the women of America tried to get this old-time sugar cane molasses for their baking; without it all their care and skill in following old recipes could not achieve the real Southern flavor.

Then, a few years ago, this bygone delicacy of plantation days was revived. Down in Louisiana, Penick and Ford began to put up a molasses so fragrant, so full flavored, sweet and pure that the first taste carries you back to the joys of childhood.

Today it is the most popular molasses in America. They named it Brer Rabbit, in honor of the hero of the old plantation stories.

The minute the can is opened the delicious old-time aroma makes you hungry.

Taste it! Here at last you have the rich mellowness to give your gingerbread, dark cakes and cookies the delectable flavor of plantation days.

See how much lighter they bake up—the foods you make with Brer Rabbit Molasses! What new softness and richness they have! How good they are and how wholesome! Brer Rabbit molasses contains mineral salts so necessary in a balanced diet. Let the children have all the Brer Rabbit cakes and cookies they want.

You can get Brer Rabbit at your grocer's. It is packed in two grades—Gold Label Brer Rabbit (light molasses for table use as well as cooking) and Green Label Brer Rabbit (dark molasses with a stronger flavor for cooking). Penick & Ford, Ltd., New Orleans.

DOWN STREAM by Harold Titus

As Putnam Fished for Sparkling Trout, So He Made Harris Fish for Mrs. Putnam When He Learned Irma was Untrue; and Then—

"We won't be heathen up there—any more."

IN those other years when life for Martin Putnam was simpler and happier Three Pines had known only a company of middle aged, prosaic fishermen, who spent their days in the cool embrace of the Au Sable and their evenings over sober pipes on the veranda, where they could see the stars through the trees and the fireflies through the alders.

Then the place was just a cabin of peeled logs, low and dingy and still retaining that aroma of woodsmen's clothing which for winter nights of a decade had dried on racks above the stove. But when Putnam married Irma May—or when, it had better be recorded, Irma May landed Putnam—everything changed, from the company that assembled there to the name and nature of the place. Martin took Irma to Three Pines as a part of their honeymoon and tried, in his inarticulate manner, to tell her how much the place, just as it was, had meant and always would mean to him; but when, within forty-eight hours, she showed him her sketches of the changes she wanted, he threw over all those habits of action and thought and emotion which had made the place dear and told her to go ahead; more, he tried to tell her that with enthusiasm.

That is how Three Pines became Manabozho Lodge, how the old loggers' shanty formed the nucleus for an imposing structure beside this Michigan stream, with a broad concrete terrace leading to the wide veranda with its wicker and chintz; how the place changed from a retreat for the simple friends of Martin Putnam who talked sparingly but who felt much to a rendezvous for the friends of his dashing young wife, who chattered a great deal and whose emotions, if at times spectacular, were generally transitory and shallow.

Viewing her work in that second summer and on the afternoon when the last of the builders' refuse was carried away, Irma smiled with satisfaction.

"There!" she cried. "There is what a small injection of imagination will do."

Putnam, leaning against one of the great urns which flanked the terrace, nodded but did not smile. He had no imagination.

That is why a girl like Irma could marry a good old wheel horse like Martin: because she had imagination and he had none.

It had required no inspiration to understand that when the first automobile plant began sound production in Detroit more would follow. Putnam had inherited some money and some land; he put the money into more land, home and factory sites, and when the big village drew the breath of industry and expanded and sprawled he was among the first to turn adjacent farms into fortunes. No, that was not imagination. It was sound judgment; and he directed his growing affairs as soundly and grew richer and became what newspapers call a figure.

His offices were imposing, for that was business; his bachelor apartment was modest, for that was Putnam; at heart he was no figure, but just a man who could work hard and feel deeply and say little. He liked two things—working and dry flying for trout. He found the cabin and bought it, and because a trio of majestic white pines grew nearby he called it Three Pines, a commentary on his imagination. The men he asked there were of his own kidney, as genuine as silver dollars, considering the crude place a luxurious retreat and finding profound delight in those big moments which come to men who have a genuine appreciation for light tackle and wary trout.

None of them had a heart which beat higher than Putnam's when they were on their playground. In fact, it was fishing that provoked his only flight of fancy. A confirmed upstream fisher, he bucked those sturdy currents for long hours without rest; that was because he liked to do a thing well, to play a good game by the most exacting rules; but at the end of a hard day he would turn and fish downstream, idling along, listening to the talk of the river, an eye for the color of cloud and foliage, relaxed and contented.

And at the cabin he would light his pipe and stand gazing at the stretch of water or the sunset or the stars, and say: "It would be a nice way to die, wouldn't it? Fishing downstream, with the current making walking easy? Just to keep on going until you went into the deep water below the dump? So peaceful in the big pool there!"

The others would solemnly agree and say that Mart had something of a poet in him. A poet! His speech was as stiff as a rheumatic leg! But perhaps the impulse to recite that paragraph—it scarcely ever varied in a syllable—was related to that which creates poetry.

So, given a man in his later forties who had done but two things since adolescence, worked and fished; a man of great wealth, without imagination, kindly, unsuspecting; given such as the quarry and an unscrupulous, clever woman like Irma May as the pursuer, Putnam had no chance.

He did not try escape, but he was quarry nevertheless. Irma hunted him as persistently as he fished for obstinate trout. But Martin was not obstinate; he rose to her lure eagerly and she snatched it away, and dangled herself again before him. She wanted Martin badly and knew that she would have incomplete success unless he desired her even more badly. He, whose adventures with women had been most mild and scattered, would have been putty for the hands of any intelligent female, and Irma, besides being intelligent, was most lovely and widely experienced even at twenty-seven.

Irma's friends knew there had been many opportunities for alliances more to her heart's desire, but Irma, being pointed at a definite success, had eliminated sentiment, for the time being, at least; what she needed was position and money, and Putnam had both. She disarmed her women intimates of their banter; she received the charges of Neil Harris, for instance, with cynicism. Once when Harris lost his poise and begged she melted for a moment, but hardened herself with a light laugh and told him not to be impractical. Martin could not detect the fraud because of the girl's brilliance, which dazzled him; so he was, for months, lavishly and dumbly happy.

IRMA did not abandon her pursuit when marriage gave her access to the things for which she had schemed. She played down to Putnam's understanding of women and tantalized him with her charms, but perhaps in those first nights in the cabin on the Au Sable her arms did tighten about him with an impulse that was finer and gentler than the thing which had made her a huntress. Surely, there was not so much as a latent quality about Martin Putnam for any one to dislike. His old friends used to say he was the salt of the earth; it was no overstatement.

But Three Pines became Manabozho, and Irma's friends peopled it, and the men who had been close to Putnam and had seen in him something of a poet fell away.

"You'll like her," he had said to them.

Just that, but there was ecstatic certainty behind his words. Blind! He had them around and Irma was wholly lovely and charming, Martin thought, but the silences which had been so comfortable in their other after-dinner talks were embarrassing, and conversation limped. They were not Irma's kind; also, it is probable that they understood her much better than her husband did: two things which combined to wedge them away from Putnam. Martin soon realized he had chosen between his wife and his friends, and this brought a feeling of desperate loneliness which was as transitory as it was keen, because he was in love to the eyes.

He followed in his slow, undemonstrative manner another course. He had lost one set of companions, but he could fill their places with Irma's friends, he told himself, and slaved at the task as conscientiously as he did at his wooing, which, such as it was, had not lagged an hour since its beginning. He stimulated interest for the things which interested these younger people, and tried to make them see the things he loved; but he was a bungler at this and could not get his ideas over, not even that one which in another era had lifted him to a distinctive level. For when he first said: "It would be a nice way to die. Fishing down stream, with the current doing your walking for you. Just to keep on going until you came to deep water," he met with no response. He felt that this was an impressive thing to say to any group of people, but these only looked at him strangely.

Talk of death and how to accomplish it when they were concerned with life! It brought a gap in the talk as though each was thinking "What a silly old stiff!" But Irma's voice fluttered in and words went on with Putnam doing his dogged best to follow, injecting his self-conscious comments and only feeling at ease when he watched the animated face of his wife. Ah, he admired her! He even watched the glow in young Neil Harris' face, who also watched Irma, and was proud because other men envied him.

Martin rather fancied Harris, who said he liked to fish and asked about the lodge on the Au Sable. When Putnam responded with pathetic eagerness the younger man became preoccupied, but Martin talked on for long. "You must come; I go every year," he urged, "and if you're a fly fisherman——" He rubbed his palms on his thighs with a measure of excitement.

After that Harris used to talk before the others about fishing. "We fishermen," he would begin, with an odd manner of setting Martin and himself apart, and yet surely he was without seriousness, sometimes almost derisive about it, which puzzled Putnam and made the rest laugh; made Irma bite her lips as if to hold smiles back.

IT was the following summer that Three Pines became Manabozho Lodge and it was then that Putnam realized how far he had traveled. He mentioned something about a trip with his old cronies and through his wistfulness sensed his wife's disapproval.

"I had planned a party," she said. "Of course, it's only talk yet, but I'd like to take some of our friends up for a housewarming. If you don't want it——"

And Putnam did what any other as madly in love would have done: discarded his last chance of renewed contact with his old comrades to suit the whim of his wife. To insist would be selfishness; it would make her unhappy; too bad, but a man's first obligation. So he reasoned. He quieted the suspicion that he, too, might find something lacking by again telling himself that in these younger men he might find good companions. Young Harris, with his ironic manner, was a nice chap; he fished, too; and Dr. Hand was another, a dapper young surgeon with money behind him. Putnam had never warmed to Hand or his brittle wife, but Hand had fished. Everything had its compensation; Irma would be happy.

And then when he went home to pack for the trip came a jolt. From a closet he dragged his treasures—new Scotch waders, the faded fishing jacket, the hat. Ah, that hat! Limp and discolored by weather and sweat and fly dope, laden with flies and memories! His fly boxes, his rods, fingering them as though they were fragile, living things; his net, his pipe, and the half guiltily concealed plug of tobacco; his cotton pants and blue shirts; his sneakers for nights about camp.

Then Irma was in the room, his dinner coat over her arm.

"The shirts and collars are in your closet, Martin."

"Those?" with an amazed laugh.

"Of course! We won't be heathen up there, Martin." Then added: "Any more."

"To be sure." She went before he could think of anything to add.

He played up to his part as he saw it. His manner, standing beside his chair as they came in to dinner, arrested the others. He was host in his house; he dreaded this and felt himself flushing, but he felt it was the thing to do and heard himself saying:

"While we are all together we—Irma and I—want our friends to know that—that Manabozho is theirs. We trust that this housewarming will mean the beginning of closer friendships for all of us. I have always said that it did men good to touch elbows in the big places. We hope it will do you all good; we know it will benefit us."

He bowed stiffly and Irma, flushing, looked down as Neil Harris drew out her chair. Dr. Hand said something irrelevant and the laughter was explosive. Putnam believed he must have missed some piece of cleverness, unconscious of being laughed at for a serious minded old duffer.

It was a protracted party and a triumph for Irma. Putnam said enthusiastic things ——with the dark drop of blood oozing about the hook.

about it to her each night when they were alone, but the affair was without heaven for him, except that it satisfied his wife. In the first place, none of the men were fishermen. Young Harris did well enough, but he was not of the elect; his heart was not in it. Dr. Hand gave up the flies on a bright, still day when the trout were not rising, caught grasshoppers, and sunk them into pools, bearing home a creel filled with trout captured at the cost of what to Putnam was shamelessness, and said that he was satisfied! And there were other things —a spirit of abandon that jarred. Martin had not objected to Irma's smoking before, but now somehow he did not like to see her lighting so many cigarets between dances (they danced a great deal, except Putnam, who was too self-conscious to attempt it), and the cocktails worried him a bit. The first night he had thought they gave Irma added charm; later he shrugged and did not analyze his reaction to her laughter and the light in her eyes.

After that party was ended Putnam returned once more, taking three of his old cronies, but they were constrained and restless in the new place; they did not fit any more, and the expedition was dreary.

In that second winter Martin gradually became conscious of an uneasy sense of inferiority, an out-of-placeness; his role of host became hollow; he was of about as much importance to his wife's friends as the least consequential picture on the walls. He was given rather cursory attention when he asserted himself, but they withdrew even that regard the instant he relaxed the effort to hold the stage. He had nothing at all in common with these people; he had no understanding of any of them. For instance, the odd merriment which Neil Harris could provoke by aligning himself with Putnam with his, "Now, we fishermen." Martin felt sure that this was irony; some of the others laughed, almost unwillingly, and then blushed. The incidents left him particularly annoyed; he did not know that they imposed on his slow wit to make sport. He only knew he was lonely.

Also, his relationship with Irma changed. He had never been a glib lover, and when he tried to woo his wife now it seemed to annoy her. Once she said tartly, "O, don't!" when he touched her, and he thought she shuddered. For days thereafter he went about in a chill which found its seat in his heart. That shudder had shaken him away from her; he tried, but could not close the breach. No more words, no outward manifestation; but he knew.

Throughout that winter Martin Putnam went through the tortures of a man who plays an unfamiliar game for an invaluable prize and sees nothing but failure. He suspected only his inadequacy to play up to his wife. He was not jealous; merely depressed and consciously inferior. He was not even disturbed by the frequency of Neil Harris' visits to his home. Irma liked Harris and Putnam liked him in a wistful sort of way because of all these people Harris was the only one who presented possibilities of friendship; so eager was he to cement this relationship that he came to overlook the strange manner of the others when Harris ironically grouped himself close to Putnam with his little speeches, always prefaced by "Now, we fishermen."

That June house party was even more elaborate than the first. Nearly a score of people were there, the group which had warmed the lodge the summer before and others who meant but familiar names and faces and odd personalities to Putnam. Once again they assembled for the first dinner and once again Putnam felt it incumbent upon himself to play up to his idea of host. He stood behind his chair and repeated his stilted speech of welcome; again he felt their surprise, and with it, detected something that for a moment he thought was amusement, as if they were laughing at him. He felt as still and foreign before the unity of these people!

In the stream he found a certain solace—bucking the sturdy current, driving his fly into difficult places, making the trout come to the lure when they were indifferent to food.

It was a brilliant June night with a high moon in a cloudless sky, a breath of breeze from the south, and Putnam was in the stream, casting for the fish which were out on the sand flats feeding on a hatch of May flies. A wonderful night, with the mists retaining until the edge of darkness a tinge of the afterglow's purple stain; fish a-plenty and of satisfactory weight, and yet Putnam was not happy. He was uneasy and lonely and in the midst of the hatch, when a fish of incredible size was rising in midstream, he turned to shore, threaded the fringe of swamp, and walked up the rise to Manabosho. He could see them dancing, and paused on the terrace to watch.

The music stopped and some one began winding the phonograph. Voices were shrill and laughter carried a brittle tone. He realized that the cocktails——

A man, a fellow named Hugh Caverly, dragged a chair from the dining table and tapped smartly on its back. Laughter gave to silence, and then, with hands folded, his face in an expression of lugubrious sobriety, he began a mimic welcome to the guests. He was flushed and perhaps a bit unsteady on his feet, but that was no excuse. Putnam's own words of a few nights before, delivered at the first dinner, came through the open French doors in cruel burlesque. The silence was profound for a moment, and then was broken by a woman's giggle. Putnam's eyes sought her out: Dr. Hand's wife. He searched the other faces and saw Irma step forward.

"Don't, Hugh!" she protested, but she laughed.

A woman grasped her arm and drew her back, saying sharply: "Behave, Irma! You've enjoyed your husband by yourself long enough!"

Caverly went on with his mimicry; the laughter rose, and Irma laughed with them, at first unwillingly and then, turning her back on the others, she gave way to genuine mirth. Neil Harris was at her side; he grasped her elbow possessively and whispered close into her ear and laughed—laughed so confidentially!

Hands clapped when Caverly finished, sat stiffly in his chair, as Putnam had done; and then sprightly Dr. Hand was in the center of the room.

"Listen!" He held both hands wide. "Listen, you small souls! Have you ever touched elbows in the big places? Have you? And have you ever thought of dying? Wouldn't you like to die fishing—downstream, with the current?"

Putnam heard no more. He watched Irma, laughing with the rest, controlling herself so Hand could go on uninterrupted; and when he had finished she ran into a darkened corner, hands to her cheeks, laughing—laughing! Harris followed her.

MARTIN saw, now. They were making sport of him! It was all so clear. They were saying the things they thought, mocking openly as they had mocked these two years behind his back. And Irma laughed with them—at him! Her curtness, her lack of response were explained now. She thought him a fool. He was, for her as well as for these others, ridiculous.

And he saw more, for his eyes, still on the shadowy figure of his wife, saw Harris drag her hands from her face and kiss her. She did not draw away. She laughed, with her face against the man's breast and one arm crept easily over his shoulder. In the gesture was the mark of being on familiar ground.

Music again, and when the record was ended some one looked at the stairway and plucked the sleeve of another. Voices trailed off. Martin Putnam, still in his waders and fly filled hat, was on the landing, looking down at his guests. For an interval he stood gazing from face to face, and in his expression was a commanding quality, superior and tremendous.

"Luck, Martin?" Irma asked, and her voice was thin and drawn.

He made no reply, but came on down, stopping on the last step, and his hand which had been behind him dropped to his side. A woman gave a light scream at sight of the pistol and Dr. Hand took a step forward. A gesture of the free hand commanded silence.

"I heard," he said to the group, and then to Irma and Harris: "I saw."

He walked across to the doorway and halted. When he talked it was stiffly, as though he were embarrassed, but there was no hesitation in his manner.

"We are going outside now," he said. "I have thought that I was the only one interested in fishing, but I've been wrong, I understand. We will watch some fishing now. Harris is going to fish, actually fish, my way; he has fished his way long enough." He looked at Harris, who was sneering. "We fishermen," he murmured lowly, and stood aside with a gesture.

"Look here!" began Hand, but Putnam seemed not to hear. He said:

"You will all go outside. All of you but my wife and this—this other fisherman will sit on the steps."

HE paused; but eyed them slowly, one after another. There was murder about him and some one started. The others followed, confused and apprehensive; a woman looked at the pistol and drew away as she passed, starting to run when outside. A man grasped her arm and muttered: "Hold your head; he's lost his!"

Putnam turned to Irma and Harris: "You, now."

"Martin, what——"

"You two will go out to the terrace now. O, go!" in disgust.

The others were huddled on the veranda; Irma and Harris passed them.

"Sit down," Putnam said to the group. Pause. He repeated the words, and a girl in a flame colored gown fluttered down to the step; the others followed, a long row of silent people, white faces, dresses dulled blobs of color under the moon.

"See here, Putnam, this is between——"

"You and me!" So Martin interrupted Harris' protest. "You and Irma walk on."

He indicated direction, and they went; his determination was the sort which none questions. They stopped close together. Irma's one hand was at her throat and Harris' fingers fidgeted.

"Putnam!" It was a gesture of the weapon this time which silenced the man. Then Martin moved toward the concrete urn against which he had left his fly rod, retrieved and handed it to Harris.

"Stand there." After an instant of hesitation Harris moved toward the urn. "And you"—to his wife—"by the other one."

"Martin!"—with a fluttering gesture. "O, Martin!" But he did not reply, and she walked to the tall urn, touching it for support.

Putnam turned to the group on the steps.

"You have been unappreciative of a noble sport," he said slowly. "You have watched fishing which wasn't done according to the rules of the game; now you will watch it as we fishermen fish. Perhaps you cannot comprehend the fineness of the technique; perhaps refined devices and clever game are beyond you; I trust not.

"Mr. Harris"—his voice shook ever so slightly, "is going to fish according to the book. My wife is the fish. She will rise to his fly as she has risen for some months, probably, to a coarser lure."

He wheeled sharply as a watcher gasped.

"Cast!" he said to Harris.

"My God, Putnam, are you mad?" Harris stepped forward.

"Perhaps. But fish, Harris. Cast for her!"

"There's a fly on the leader. If you mean——"

"No man can fish without one. I'll see that she rises—even eagerly."

"But I refuse to——"

The pistol crashed and a flick of concrete was picked up, his length from Harris' feet. A woman screamed and a man rose on the steps.

"Sit down, please." Putnam had faced the gallery slowly. "You are in no danger; you should enjoy this, being clever people." And to Harris with impatience in his tone: "Cast, young man!" Mechanically the rod came up and whipped and drove the fly toward Irma. "More line; it's a good fifty feet, Harris."

"Now, Irma, rise." She moaned his name. "Rise!" he commanded. "Rise, before I become contemptuous of your failure to appreciate the art!"

And she rose, and Harris cast, and the people who had laughed at him while Harris had fished in the way they understood watched while Putnam stood silent, reprimanding Harris gently when his cast was imperfect, insisting that Irma rise.

She rose, leaping upward when the leader sang above her head, clutching upward as he ordered. She leaned against the urn at intervals and called out to him to stop, but he made no reply; and as she went through that absurd humiliation before her friends he watched her slim body which had entranced him, seeing the hands that had held him at once close and away grasp in this crazy game; hearing the tap of her pumps heels on the concrete—the heels which had trod so ruthlessly on his heart.

And once again he faced the gallery and laughed shortly.

"How do you like it?" he asked. "Isn't this for fishing? Perhaps you understand now why men love it; perhaps you understand that one way of fishing is enough for any man to master. But you don't laugh now. Not when I'm here. You've watched him fish a long time his way and laughed behind my back. Well, laugh at me now, why don't you? Or isn't it funny any more? I wonder."

He drew a hand across his eyes as he turned back and stood so a moment, looking at the stars. Then he observed that Harris had quit casting, that Irma was slumped against the urn, and the pistol crashed again.

"Fish!" he cried thickly. "Fish, you fool! And rise, you fool, as I rose to you! Afraid of the hook, eh? Well, I wasn't. The barb of yours is in my heart; at the worst, you'll have his in your hand. Fish! We fishermen, eh, Harris? You and I understand, don't we? And Irma."

A sharp cry from the woman halted him. We walked to his wife's side and looked at her white palm with the dark drop of blood oozing about the hook. "Stay back!" he said to Harris as the woman swayed into his arms. "Hand, here's a job for you. It won't hurt; I've had it lots of times. She'll not feel it in an hour. Get it out while she's in the faint. Then bring her around—bring her around. After that——"

Harris had dropped the rod and stood fuming in the moonlight. The group was on its feet, a variegated huddle. Putnam walked to where the rod lay, picked it up, and started off through the sweet fern. The huddle swept toward Irma.

"Get her upstairs," said Hand shrilly. "A hell of a mess. O, not the hook; that's a scratch. I mean——"

They knew what he meant.

MIDNIGHT. Two cars had pulled out, their occupants fleeing from that place where they had been shocked; women upstairs shivered and fluttered in and out of Irma's room, trying to quiet her.

Hand came down the stairs to where Harris and another waited.

"Any word?"

"None," answered Harris.

"Well, we'll have to get him back and straighten out this mess. We'll get him back; the rest is your job, Harris. I sent the caretakers out to hunt. He didn't go in a car, so he can't be far off."

Steps crossed the terrace.

"Doctor?" A man appeared in the doorway, a caretaker; his eyes were large and bright.

"Any luck?"

"Not much." The man came in, removing his cap, looking about, and did not stop until he was close to them.

"I located him an' tried to get him to come back, but he wouldn't. He didn't pay no attention to me except to motion me away when I tried to come close. He was fishin'."

"Fishing!" cried Hand.

"Fishin'." The caretaker nodded. "Just fishin' easy and whistlin' to himself, like he was happy, like he enjoyed it. He was goin' down stream, doctor."

The Duckling — By Inez Cunningham

Magically the "Bean Pole" Was Turned Into a Swan, and Romance Came Just Because She Was So Thin.

IT is a little fable. The old one of the ugly duckling in whose soul, even in the days of most utter ugliness, was to be found that swanlike quality which could not be hidden and which truly transformed the ugly duckling into the complete swan.

Heat, depressing, exhausting enough outside, augmented by noise and the mingled smells of suds, disinfectant, and sweat rendered the interior of Munson's hand laundry intolerable. Through the thick haze of steam a bell clanged sharply, announcing the brief respite from toil that passes at Munson's for the luncheon hour. The jarring roar of machinery stopped, the dull thudding of irons ceased, and the roll of the mangles died, leaving in the silence a heat even more agonizing.

Lizzie McGuire produced her newspaper-wrapped bundle of lunch from her locker and made her way to the flat roof of the laundry. Lizzie McGuire was the moving influence among the girls at Munson's. She was big and blithe and possessed of a certain beauty of the coarser Celtic type, moved with a large and graceful gesture of hip and shoulder, and neither God nor man commanded her complete respect. She was like a great freight ship, broad in the beam and sailing the waters of life carelessly. If her cargo was but firewood and cheap tin trays one was not aware of it by the way she breasted the stream. Every day she gathered about her the acknowledged class of Munson's: Gerda Lundgreen, big and milk white; Sophie Greer, her German parentage showing in her pink skin and enormous hips; Marie Bertalotti, with olive skin bleached by the steam to the whiteness of white jade, and whose large, round eyes of amber brown looked out of her large, round face with a surprising innocence. These and four or five others from the hand department sat in Lizzie's school of philosophy.

On the outskirts of this group of the recognized aristocracy hung precariously the Ugly Duckling—she whom Lizzie's acclaimed wit had dubbed "The Pole," partly, as she said, because her name was Tilda Litisjinska and partly because she was a regular bean-pole.

The Pole was half a head taller than the tallest of the others; to be exact, she was five feet nine inches tall, and though she was not more than a year the junior of most of them her figure was as totally unformed as theirs were overblown. Her tender skin was reddened and blotched by the same soapy influence that whitened the coarser epidermis of the rest. On the bridge of her narrow little nose was a constellation of minute freckles of palest brown. Her eyes of nunlike gray would have escaped notice but for their rim of black and the fact that they were occupying most of the room on her little face.

During the long months of her service at Munson's Tilda had stood on the outskirts of the noonday group, eagerly listening, eagerly hoping to be made part of it. Throwing out, now and then, her timid conversational crusts, generally greeted by Lizzie with flashes of wit and by the others with laughter. It was not unkindly laughter, but unkindly wit, and often followed by Lizzie with some such offer as the following: "Come on, bean pole, swallow this fried cake and see if you can get yourself a pair o' hips." But it crushed the poor little Pole, for though she might relish the doughnut she regarded Lizzie with a certain hero worship, and these public taunts were hard to bear.

And she was lonesome, fearfully lonesome, so she swallowed many such taunts, and though she did it with a grin, yet they lay, like the fried cake, heavy and sad in her little inside. Munson's was her first job since she had left the orphanage. At home in the room they rented was only her brother, night watchman in the freight yards, whom she saw on Sunday, since he went to work before she came home and to bed, behind his curtain, before she arose.

She had never had a friend; no man had yet looked at her in admiration; the only girls she knew were those at the laundry, whose friendship she more coveted than possessed.

USUALLY the noonday conversations were much the same as you, madam, hear at your bridge club. In a higher key, perhaps, and a faster tempo, seasoned with expletive more sturdy and metaphor more free, but withal on the very subjects you yourself enjoy.

But one sultry noon the conversation at Munson's was a bit different, perhaps owing to the heat—who knows? At any rate, it turned upon the subject of "shapes." Lizzie, in a querulous mood, told Gerda in less technical terms than these that she was becoming as flabby as the female of the species from which we derive our bacon. Gerda hotly resented the implication, challenging her accuser to prove it. There followed a literal comparison of "shapes," conducted with the aid of a piece of string from the wrapping department, the palm to be secured for solidity and proportion.

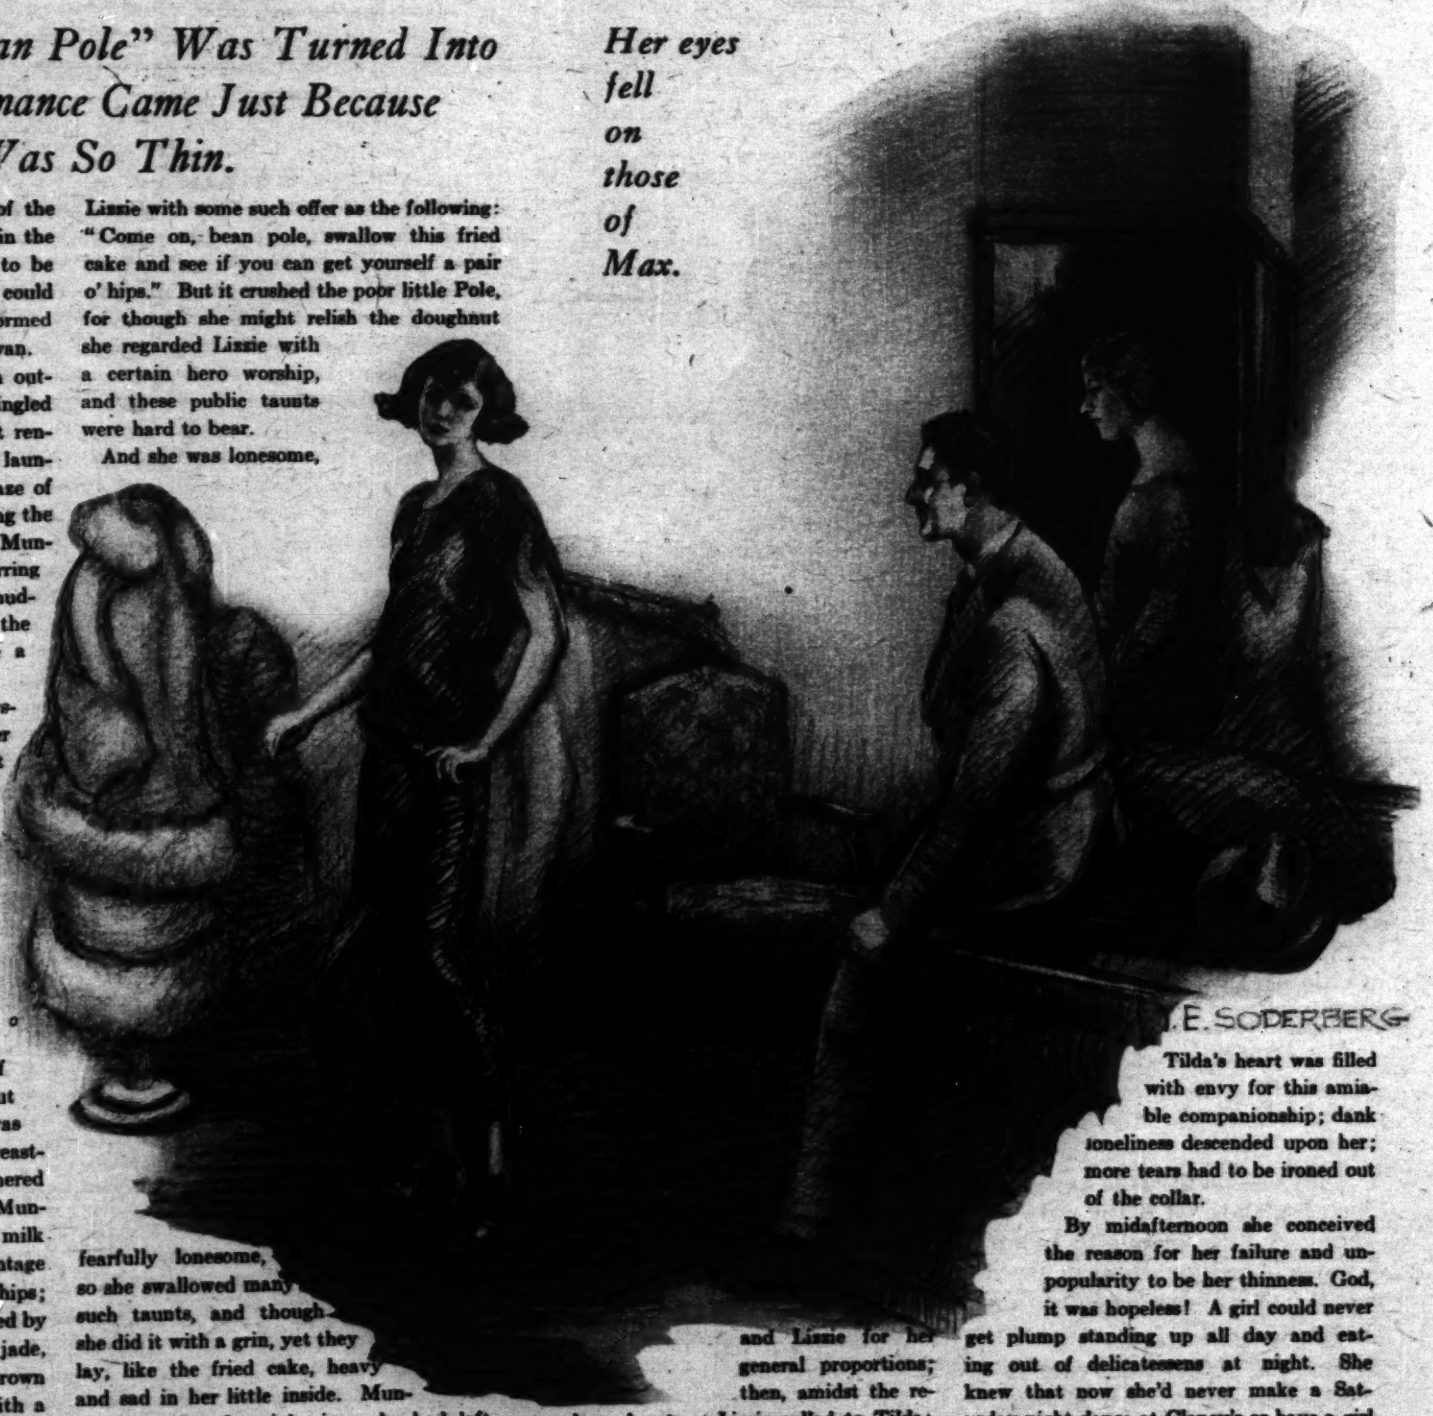
Gerda claimed honors for her chest, Sophie for her hips, Marie for her legs and arms, and Lizzie for her general proportions; then, amidst the restored good nature, Lizzie called to Tilda: "Come here, pole slats, and I'll measure you up and down—you haven't much to count crossways."

Tilda protested violently, but strong and willing hands were upon her, and shouts of laughter greeted her efforts to escape. The blood of unconquered Poland surged in Tilda's veins. Screaming half forgotten curses in her native tongue, she struck out in all directions with her flail-like arms. Unfortunately, one undirected blow fell upon Lizzie's bosom, and the dogs of war were loosed. Screams and curses, soft thuddings, and scurryings assailed the ears of the manager in his office two floors below. He ascended to the roof and put a stop to the trouble. Because she had "started it" Tilda was fired instanter, and the manager, seeing something of her terror in Tilda's face, eased his own conscience by adding insult to tragedy.

"You don't look fit for the work, anyhow," he said. "You'd better run down to Newport for the summer. You're too skinny for these parts."

The sound of the bell saved Tilda further humiliation. She advanced to her ironing board through the twitting of ten shapely swans, feeling like the duckling abandoned afresh to the doom of ugliness. Tears fell upon the linen collar she was polishing with her heavy iron; her sad thoughts were punctuated by Sophie's drawl and Lizzie's crisp replies. In spite of the recent trouble,

Her eyes fell on those of Max.



J. E. SODERBERG

Tilda's heart was filled with envy for this amiable companionship; dank loneliness descended upon her; more tears had to be ironed out of the collar.

By midafternoon she conceived the reason for her failure and unpopularity to be her thinness. God, it was hopeless! A girl could never get plump standing up all day and eating out of delicatessens at night. She knew that now she'd never make a Saturday night dance at Clancy's or have a girl friend of her own—much less a fellow. Then she remembered that she had no job. More tears, more work, more steam, more tears, and then, finally, the five-thirty bell, the hasty donning of street attire, cheery good nights, cat calls, and then Lizzie's words: "G'bye, Slats. Don't make a mistake and swallow a whole lima bean. You might be a perfect eighteen tomorrow."

Shouts of laughter as she mounted the elevated stairs.

THEN followed several lean weeks of looking for a job, "a sitting down job." She had decided to forego ironing. But there didn't seem to be any sitting down jobs that she could do, however diligently she searched the papers. On the sixteenth day she was about to give up the struggle and try some other laundry. For luck she took one last look at the papers. She passed over the "Help Wanted Domestic" and was about to turn the page when her eye was caught by some larger letters half way down the column. They read:

PERSONAL—ARE YOU SLENDER? WANTED, young lady, weighing not more than 115 pounds. Must be tall and fairly good looking. No professional models need apply. Fine salary to right girl. Call between 3 and 5.
SCHLOSSINGER & MYER.

The address was one on lower Madison avenue. Tilda's heart thumped as she reread the advertisement. She wondered if her thinness could be called slender by any stretch of the imagination. Hopefully the Beautiful white teeth remain beautiful and white only if the mouth glands are active. Your tooth paste must do more than clean your teeth—it must help the mouth glands keep them clean

Brushing cleans your teeth for a few minutes only

Your six tiny mouth glands alone can keep them clean day and night

THE acids of decay are forming all of the time—all over your teeth—

Brushing cannot stop this condition. As soon as you hang up your tooth brush the acids are at it again.

Only one thing can help—your mouth glands. It is the duty of these six little glands to pump away all the time; to wash away small particles and neutralize the acids.

But the glands need exercise. Soft foods have taken it away. They are slowing down and letting the teeth decay. You must give your mouth glands the help they need.

A tooth paste that helps these glands keep your teeth clean

Pebeco Tooth Paste helps these glands. As soon as it enters the mouth it exerts an invigorating effect on the mouth glands. It makes them send forth an increased flow of saliva and it makes them continue to work in a healthy normal fashion.

This increased flow of fluids pours into all the crevices of the mouth and in between the teeth where the tooth brush cannot reach—washing away small particles; cleansing every surface of the teeth.

These fluids being alkaline neutralize the acids of the mouth which are constantly forming.

Pebeco does more than clean your teeth. It leaves your whole mouth in a healthy, live condition—your gums, your palate—the entire oral cavity. Physicians say its tonic effect extends even to the tonsils.

The best possible dentifrice for cleaning

Pebeco cleans and polishes the teeth as thoroughly as any dentifrice can. It does not scratch. It does not injure the edges of the gums or delicate membranes of the mouth.

The invigorating taste and the refreshing feeling Pebeco leaves in your mouth is convincing proof that this tooth paste has done more than clean your teeth temporarily. It has left your mouth in a healthy condition which will make it stay clean.

Pebeco is manufactured only by Lehn & Fink, Inc.—50c at all druggists.

The Duckling

"not more than 118 pounds" lingered in her mind and drove her to the corner drug store, where there was a penny scale. Breathlessly she watched the hand go around and stop at one hundred and fifteen. Surely, she thought, no one could be nearer the magic figures than three pounds—she wondered if it were a sitting down job; went home and took up the paper again. As she read, the words "Must be fairly good looking" seemed to grow in size till they obliterated the rest of the page. All through the hot and almost sleepless night the printed words assailed her, but by morning she had won the argument. "If they want 'em thin, how can they be good looking?" This question was the answer, the irrefutable answer to her humility. By eight o'clock she was dressed in her best white blouse and plaid silk shirt and well on her way through, to her, unfamiliar streets towards Schloshingle & Myer. Finally she found the name on a door three flights up in a narrow building, and after it the legend, "Ladies' Wholesale Gowns."

She wondered if she would be expected to sew—so narrow was her tiny life that she had never heard of a mannequin. When she opened the door a sharp bell rang, but no one paid any attention, so she entered a small and stuffy room already filled with other girls. There were girls of every type: those who actually were thin, those who considered themselves slender, those who once had been slender and were now merely corseted to a certain straightness with rubber and tape, those modern mediums so much more clever in giving the illusion of suppleness than the torturous whalebones of our mothers. Many of the girls seemed homely by reason of their thinness, some were by nature homely, a few were pretty in a cheap sort of way, but all, by reason of their smarter clothes and the sophistications of their profession, seemed to Tilda swans indeed. In was only her mental repetition of the magic numerals, 115, that kept Tilda from flying for sheer fright. Tnen an inner door opened and Mr. Hyman Myer, senior partner, emerged. He was fat and forty and five feet tall, and he reminded Tilda of the little doctor who used to come to the orphanage. He looked over his hooked nose, and his keen eyes rested on a group of girls standing together talking near the door. He turned his cigar over in his mouth before he spoke.

"Fife or sigs of you yonk ladies might leaf now," he said. "Before I haf yet to mention names I can say that I haf not been in business already eighteen years without I should know when I see her a porfessional model. You, I said plain in English, I don't want. You might have saved you your carfare—but I guess you can'd read straight, eh?"

He did not wait for the dimppearances that latter occurred, but began his slow tour of the room, saying, now to one, now to another, "You I don'd want," "Not tall enough yet." Or, as he felt an arm, "Not now you weigh 118—last year, perhaps, but not now"; but he was not unkindly. Finally in his tour he came to Tilda. His little, round, greasy face looked up into her pleading one, flushed and brightened by excitement.

"How much you weigh?" he demanded, staccato.

Tilda managed to utter the magic numerals. He took her by the arm and turned her around; he grunted. Then he asked her a lot of questions to test, as he thought, her intelligence.

Finally he said, "Ve-ll, better you be too thin as too fat—step in here, blease."

Then followed the most bewildering hour of the duckling's life. Mr. Myer called to some one named Kitty, and said, "I vant you should fix up this miss and we should see how she does. Not a bad sigsteen, eh?"

A beautiful creature slightly taller than Tilda appeared from between a pair of velvet curtains and smiled at her out of eyes Irish as Lizzie's; but much kindlier.

"Come on, dearie," she said. "We'll try on the Paris stuff. That is the real test."

She gave Tilda's waist a squeeze with her free hand as she pushed her behind the velvet curtains.

"Gee," she said, "are you wearing a corset?"

Inside the little gray fitting room she was divested of most of her garments, and Kitty paused to have a good laugh at the ridiculous corset. She was given some lovely silken things and gowned in soft brown material, the latest scream for fall. Kitty disappeared and held a conference with Mr. Myer; then the two came in and inspected her. Mr. Myer said that Kitty was "right all right," but that, "by Gerahmiah, she was some green onion" and that she'd have to get some freckle cream and Kitty would have to fix her coiffure and give her some lessons right off in the walk. He asked Tilda how she "would like eighteen dollars per week and get her clothes at wholesale, huh? But you got to be a quick learner, because we expect some of the big buyers in the first of the month and you gotto be visible then."

When Tilda, for answer, burst into tears it took Kitty and several curse words from Mr. Myer to get out of her that she was willing to accept the terms, but what she the "fairly good looking"—the ugly duckling was speaking. Mr. Myer laughed immoderately and patted her arm.

"Ust so long as you ain't got a figger," he said, "we can make a beauty outa your face—but when you got a bust and some hips we can'd do nothink for you at all! So you don'd get fat, remember, or the bargain is off."

AND now there remains but to add the last chapter to the fable in which we actually see the duckling turned into the swan and watch her swimming among swans.

Hairdressers, manicuring, face creams and Kitty Hogan, to say nothing of Schloshingle & Myer modistes, had done their three weeks of best for Tilda, now Miss Pole, when Max Schloshingle, junior partner, came back from a promotion trip. Max asked Kitty, soon to marry his brother, what the new model was like.

At this juncture a low voiced and stately girl, clad in clinging black, approached Kitty, remarking, "Say, I got Francine to bob my hair. She thinks it will be easy to train it to curl this way. Them marcelles comes too high—does it look all right?"

She turned the complete circle of the mannequin with slow, unconscious grace, and as she completed it her eyes fell on those of Max, almost on a level with her own. She beheld therein the first thrilling tribute of masculine admiration. Tilda's heart pounded, her black lashes fell, and the hot blood rushed into her cheeks. When she raised her eyes she saw the admiration replaced by interest. Kitty Hogan laughed and introduced them.

It was the beginning of their romance. Afterwards, when she was calling him Max and wearing a diamond solitaire and the sable choker he had given her for her eighteenth birthday, and Mr. Hyman Myer, in black wrath, was looking for another mannequin, she snuggled against Max and told him the whole story of the ugly duckling. They were riding in his green roadster—for business had been good. He took her past Munson's hand laundry, and he said, "Say, listen, girlie, how would you like to step in there with me and show that bunch where they get off at, eh? Say, how would you, anyhow?"

She would never know what a sacrifice to his pride the offer was, especially after having to tell his parents that she didn't have a family, that she came from an orphanage, and that she did not belong to their race, but that he was going to marry her in spite of all.

She snuggled close to him in the little roadster. He was only a second rate silk merchant, it is true, but to her the finest gentleman in the world, loving and rich beyond dreams. But now she was the complete swan, so she just snuggled closer to her fiancé and said, "Gee, no. I don't give a button, now. I have Kitty. She's the only friend I need, and she's got it on Lizzie McGuire a thousand ways—and I've got you. No, honey, what's the use of making them sorry? They wouldn't get you, anyhow."

"MOTHER OF GOLD"

MADRE d'ORO

Blue Ribbon Fiction

By EMERSON HOUGH

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE:

JOHN PALMER, a veteran engineer; "Pug" Hallock, Don Silsby, and Barry Allison are in Mexico seeking "Madre d'Oro," the mother lode of the world's gold, which Palmer has located. The prospectors meet a beautiful girl, Luisa Martinez, sister of the girl Palmer stole from her proud Spanish family and married. The Americans take Luisa with them.

Back in Deneville, O., Allison had confided his secret to Mary Westlake, and she had promised to wait one year for him. But Randall Trent, the richest man in town, loves her and follows when Dr. Blakely orders Mrs. Westlake to Mexico for her health.

Father Ernesto, a Samaritan of a district where folks never grow old, tells Mary that John Palmer learned the story of Madre d'Oro from Pedro the Old, the ancient servant of the Martinez family. On an old Spanish map he shows her the supposed location of the mother lode. Mary leads a party to old Pedro in the desert and tries to pry from him the secret of Madre d'Oro. The knowledge that a woman knows so much of the great Aztec secret kills Pedro.

Trent tells Mary he will try to beat Allison and his party to the treasure.

Armed followers of Villa overtake the Americans and demand that Luisa go back with them. Palmer and his friends kill eight Mexicans and the others surrender, but Silsby is slain in the battle. Then the Americans push on.

TWELFTH INSTALLMENT.

The Wilderness.

THE little band pressed on at such speed as they could manage after their first plunge into the broken country off the highway. As they knew, every hour now counted, and the first hours were the most valuable. Clinging to the rocky ledges as best they could, they employed all the artifices of good mountain men who did not lack in scouting knowledge of their own. They all knew well enough that should they be pursued and found in this country, hundreds of miles below their own border line, they would, even if not charged with the killing of the rurales on the road, be unable to explain their presence. That meant but one thing. The wilderness offered them their one hope of safety.

The two women, not unused to mountain travel, kept up well with the others, their sure-footed Spanish mules knowing what was expected of them. All rode in silence, for Palmer thought no further explanation of the route was necessary beyond the general description which he had given his companions.

For different reasons, perhaps one of superstition, perhaps from the fact that better country existed elsewhere, and closer to the main trail, this lower volcanic country, rich as it was, held no settlements at all. The landscape was broken by a series of deep ridges. There was no trend, no contour, no water-shed system at all to the country. The mountains seemed thrown down carelessly together. True, it was rich, but under the soft vegetation there lay a flooding savagery. They were leaving all the old trails back of them, advancing into a region which certainly was not inviting, not welcoming, even, although they must depend upon it absolutely for such protection as they might claim.

Luisa, as she rode, looked now and again, even through her tears, at the stern alertness, the activity and strength of these men, whose keen faces never had blanched in fear, who seemed so self-reliant, even here, with everything against them. Hallock, from time to time, much of the time, rode at her side or close at hand. They rarely spoke. Sometimes their eyes met silently.

Evening came, after their first long, hard push below the road. A little pool of water, caught in the rocks, offered what they most needed. They threw off packs, made ready their simple preparations for the night. They had come into a sort of flattening in the broken short hills, where a gentle savannah lay spread before them, in the mannner of a primordial amphitheater, set down here among the hills and long ago forgotten. Once the stream might have run elsewhere, now the summer sun had somewhat shrunk it. The whole little picture, veiled in the twilight, surrounded by the purple hills, made a scene wild and fascinating enough for any not driven as were these who now occupied it.

"You have been here before, John?" asked Barry Allison.

Palmer nodded. "I know where I am, precisely. Once I came back here out of La Luz. I was trying to get in back of the big valley which we're after—I lost that trail—indeed, there was no trail at all. I couldn't do it. There is no definite contour to this country. It is all broken volcanic land, don't you see? But I know very well where I am and where we're going to come out.

"Even so," he continued, smiling. "We're not the first to find this spot."

"What do you mean?" inquired Allison. "Not the first?"

"No—the Aztecs knew it. The Mayas, I suppose. Come with me."

They walked a little way apart, toward the upper edge of the savannah. There was no sign of house or human habitation. No, and yet there had been human habitation here at one time in the history of the world. Straight up from the sloping surface of the earth, half hidden by the flood of vegetation, there stood before them one of the great prehistoric monuments which we ascribe to the mysterious Mayas; a tall shaft of the hard trachyte, sculptured from top to bottom in strange figures, mysterious, undecipherable, on which another race now gone once inscribed its message, its knowledge, perhaps its secrets as well. Old, old, very old, it was; none might tell how old.

"It's enough to make you creep."

PALMER pointed to the shaft as they approached. They both could see the crude but striking sculptures of that same type which so often are found in the jungles of Guatemala, Yucatan, Nicaragua — things which men risk death and even banditti to see.

Nor was this all. Just beyond the edge of the forest stood a broken stairway, the now flattened pyramid of what once, without question, had been one of the strange sacrificial temples devoted to the rites of some bygone people, whether Toltec, Aztec, Maya, or Quiche.

"Look yonder if you wish to see something," said Palmer. "I have stood here before and studied it. It's enough to make you creep. Look over at the top where the steps are broken off and the grass begins to grow. You see that stone up there? I have never been up, but I really believe that's the old sacrificial altar. See how it rounds off on top. It looks rather smooth. Well, that's where they stretched out their victim. One man each for the hands and feet and one for the head—and the old priest with an obsidian knife waiting to split his ribs and drag out his heart and hold it up to the sun! Pleasant people, those!

"They used to treat their prisoners very well—gave them everything in the world to eat and wear and allowed them the society of the most beautiful young women of the tribe. At the same time, they never concealed the fact that after a while they intended to take them up those stairs yonder. They made sacrifices to the sun—so terrible in their extent that even the Spaniards were horrified. It is more than probable that back of the sacrifices to the sun was the wish to propitiate the avenging spirit which presided over the great Valley of Madre D'Oro. That was the heart of the Aztec people. It was the core of the Aztec religion.

"Well, I suppose these steps which we see falling into decay now have seen a great many laggard footsteps in their day—the victims on their death march. And I suppose also that the heart of the Aztec empire, the core of the Aztec religion, is just as much in existence today as it ever was."

Palmer fell into one of his brooding silences, which Allison did not venture to break for some time. "It's strange, though, isn't it," he said at length, "that a country as rich as this should never have been explored to its last limit?"

"Strange, yes, but stranger things have happened than that Madre D'Oro should not be known today. Have you never read Las Casas, the historian of the Conquest? Did you ever hear of the lost land of Tierra Deguerra?"

"I never did," said Allison.

"Well, that strange lost land still exists! It lies between the Cordilleras and the city of Chiapas in a valley all its own. Cortes never conquered it. Some of the priests begged to be allowed to try the ways of Christianity and not of war in the subjugation of that country. It, therefore, never was fully conquered by fire and sword. Today it is in part occupied by uncivilized and unbaptized Indians, who live precisely as they did when Cortes passed through here. These facts were well known by the head of the Dominicans, in the city of Guatemala. It was agreed that for five years of the conquest no Spaniard should go into that country at all. None ever did. There is no Spanish civilization there today; and yet the government of Central America knows of that region perfectly well. It makes no attempt to extend its own government over that district.

"I have had an old padre tell me that, four days toward the great City of Mexico, starting from his old home down below here and crossing the great Sierra Madres and the Cordillerras, there is a great living city to be seen down in there, even now, and that it is just as it was when the Spaniards came in 1556—temples, houses, gardens, and all. It has in part the same old religion today, in spite of all the Dominicans did to set it aside in their earlier futile attempt.

"The old Padre told me he had heard that story very generally, first at the village called Chajal. From that village it was not far to the top of a high ridge, and from that place the tops of the temples could be seen. He told me that once he made that climb himself, to a point about twelve thousand feet above sea level, and that at a great distance he saw that very city which had been described to him, lying white and gleaming in the sun. He said there was no doubt at all about it—that city existed then and exists today.

"Now, you see that is getting pretty authentic, if you want something to marvel at—this hidden city of the Quiches or Mayas or Aztecs, whatever you choose to call these people. No white man of our day has ever set foot in that city. Many have tried to do so, but the natives have killed every white man who has gotten that far into the interior. They still practice the old religion, so said my old Dominican friar. Yet those are the people who made all these images through all this country, almost down to the Isthmus of Panama. The Christian Indians who guide you in this lower country will always break off the nose of every stone idol they find hidden out in the tropic forest. The Christianized savage thinks he does that to the glory of God."

"Our course, however, does not run in that direction, does it, John?"

"No, but if that whole hidden city can exist and does so exist, protected by lack of investigation, by lack of roads and trails, why should it be any more wonderful that the still hidden heart and core of that whole civilization should also remain undiscovered today? There is no doubt whatever that that great body of gold did exist, and that it was known. Around it have been cast the great protective agencies of attractions elsewhere of the inland civilization. The temblor and volcano also have protected it. Down below here we'll cross a flood of lava buried under by a flood of vegetation.

"So I say, I shall prove to you there is no marvel at all in the existence today of that great vein of gold. And marvel or not, I tell you, I have seen it! I don't like to talk about it, that is true—it is too terrible a thing. But you shall see it also. Perhaps you also shall be smitten dumb—I don't know.

"Of course, the valley itself is not really a valley at all. It is literally a sunken chasm due to the volcanic action of Orizaba in some forgotten day of the past. There is no great mystery about it at all. It is only chance, as I have pointed out, that no one really has taken the trouble to run down these old legends.

"Now the old padre made me a map of his lost city which he last had seen when he was a young man in Chajal. He showed me the mountain where he stood when he looked down on that city, where it lay unmapped by any hand but his. 'Señor Juan,' he said to me, 'here are men living as they did when the Spaniards first came. Cortez and Alvarado never saw them. If we could speak with those living men, they could read for us all the riddle of what the jungles yet conceal, these countless images of stone which seem Egyptian, Assyrian. They could read the words on the old pillars which we have not yet read. Ah, if we could talk with those men, what could we not learn of the history of the world!'

"'But' he always added, 'that is another world. I don't know that they would live if we forced them to leave their own country. They could not understand us, we cannot understand them. It is like a dream city. At times I ask if I have not dreamed that I saw it. But I know I have not dreamed. The government of this republic below us knows that what I say is true. But, they have trouble enough with their own cities!'

"'But, one day,' the old friar always said, 'I'm going back there. I shall see if I can find the answer to all these riddles.'

"Well, if we want to run into riddles and marvels here's a whole settlement of the same people who once protected Madre D'Oro. There was Pedro, the old man of the lower peninsula. He was the last man, I presume, who held the actual secret of Madre D'Oro. I wonder if Pedro is still alive!

"Well," concluded John Palmer, with a deep sigh, and a wave of the hand at the old temple stairs as he turned aside, "I'm like the old padre. I shall keep on going until the end comes, I presume. If he comes out with his story—if we come out with ours—there will be enough to set this world by the ears, I'm thinking!"

"At one time, John," said his companion, "you said you might have to rely upon the Yaqui settlements if we got into actual combat with them and the government of Mexico. What hope would we have in a case like that?"

"Perhaps not very great hope," assented Palmer. "It seems to me these things will take care of themselves. The Yaquis live forty, fifty miles below my home. They have no suspicion of any hidden valley. Perhaps, after we have seen that valley ourselves, the thing may simplify—we may not want to try to move all the Madre D'Oro bodily to the United States. We may not want to go to war!"

"But then, why do we go on—what benefit do we get of it?" demanded Allison, troubled.

"You're now asking me questions which I am not yet disposed to answer," replied the older man. "I simply say we must go on to the end. Our plan then may shape itself. In things like this, one man or two or three can never shape the plan. Madre D'Oro will make its own plan for you or me!"

AT this latitude, and at an elevation somewhat below that of the upper plains embraced in the great Tierra Templada of Mexico, the nights now were not so cool, the days less readily supportable in their midday ardor. These things, however, were but details for our adventurers, who were carried on by an ambition so imperative as to blot out everything that lay between the wish and the fruition. When the two women first had joined the party, practically all felt that a handicap had been assumed which might make success impossible. But Luisa, more tenderly reared than her woman, Serafina, had that courage which can rise above bodily comfort. She made her scanty couch upon the ground beyond the brush screen which Serafina erected, and youth and vitality governed her sleep.

As for the men of the party, lean, hard, and hardy, they cast themselves upon the ground this night with scarce more than the edge of a blanket over and under them. When morning came, they arose forthwith and began where affairs had ended the previous day.

Breakfast was usually the time of moodiness between them, as with all who live thus close to the edge of existence. Their supplies now were scanty; enough, as they supposed, to last them through to the valley of La Luz, where Palmer promised them something better. Serafina in her occasional visits to the little villages, always had brought with her abundant coffee, and this morning beverage seemed to give them new heart once more.

But now the memory of the bloody and sad events of the previous day sat on the heart of each man. They had started out four friends together, knowing the risk. Now they were but three. The loss of Silsby sat on them heavily. Allison voiced the feeling of each man when he spoke.

"I can't get over it," said he. "Silsby always did his share, and he never grouched over anything. A finer chap never lived."

"Well," said John, gravely, "any of us might meet the same fate. Our chance now is to keep hidden. We have no status here in Mexico—we're worse off than filibusters if we're discovered, because they would be sure to identify us with the killing of the rurales on the big road. If we're caught the same thing will happen to us that did to a great many army officers of our own country in the early days."

Hallock drew the little flag once more from his hooting where he carried it. "Anyhow," said he, shutting his teeth grimly

"They saluted this, if they never saluted a bigger flag at Vera Cruz."

Allison nodded. "Still," said he, "even if we find what we're after, it is not certain that our flag would follow our rifle barrels, or that the constitution would follow the flag. We are only individuals here."

"That's true," said John Palmer. "Those men were only individuals who started the independence of Texas and took that big slice from the old government of Spain and Mexico."

"What does he say?" demanded Luisa, pointing to Hallock, but addressing John Palmer.

"He says, my dear, that this is going to be a fine day for travel through the hills. He hopes you will not find it uncomfortable. Two days more, my dear, and then we shall see the valley of La Luz!"

"Home! And then, Señor Juan?"

"And then we shall see!"

SOON they were on their way once more, boring deeper and deeper through the lower and warmer country which lay on the shoulder of Orizaba. Such broken conversation as the three men held nearly always came around again and again to the question of Madre D'Oro and the strangeness of the fact that it had not yet been discovered. But now John Palmer explained no more, reasoned no more. All he would say was, the time had not yet come. So all of that day they traveled, and that next night made encampment in the heart of a wilderness so vast that it seemed to them they never could be found, even by the most intelligent and resolute pursuers.

Afternoon of the second day and Palmer called a halt. He rode back and forth over a restricted section, looking to every point of the compass. At length he threw up his hand.

"It's all right," said he. "This is the last time we need take our bearings. You gentlemen needn't use your map, which you have on the piece of canvas, because now you could hardly miss the trail. Look yonder toward the south."

"I see it!" exclaimed Allison. "That's the last nitch! That's where we head."

"Yes, that's the gate to the valley of La Luz. When we have reached that pathway you will not need me any more should anything go wrong. It will all be simple after that; and it is simple from here to the valley of La Luz."

"How far was your place above the last settlement?" asked Hallock presently.

"I should say fifty miles—and a couple of hundred years," replied Palmer.

"Hard to understand."

"I don't pretend to understand anything. I don't understand this little gold god I have got in my pack. I can't explain it. All I say is that tomorrow night we'll sleep within a day's march of the Madre D'Oro."

An hour later he broke out uninvited once more, after his strange fashion. "After all, what right has the world to think that the last great discovery of gold has been made? They have all come without premeditation, without warning. Take the great Comstock lode—it is really the only mother vein ever found in the United States. It runs for twenty miles and it is a true mother vein, without any doubt or question. Yet it lay there absolutely without any indication. The prospectors who struck it never found any float—they just blundered into it forthright. In the same way, there has never been any trace of gold found on La Luz. There was nothing to bring any one up that valley. And yet there is the mother lode.

"Comrade, yonder lies your Italy!"

"I don't suppose any of you can recall the names of the prospectors who first struck the Comstock. It may be our names will be forgotten some time in the same way. Plain, simple, ordinary men, all of us, like those others. And when you actually see what I have seen, it will seem so natural and simple and easy that you will wonder why you and I ever made any fuss about it.

"Of course, I never would have found this if I hadn't had the inside knowledge from old Pedro. All ordinary prospecting methods would absolutely have failed."

"But what on earth, John, made you go all that distance to get us fellows to come with you?" Allison turned toward him curiously.

"I knew I was an old man," replied John Palmer. "I needed help. I wanted good Americans to help me—plain, simple men like myself, but younger. Always the old stories kept coming back to my mind—that the conquerors of this country always have come from the north, not from the west or from the east. That seems to be a fact, and why should you or I question that? At least, here we are, three of us out of the four. It is sad to say, but I suppose we are lucky to be three out of four today. And even now, within sight of the very gate itself, we don't know whether there will be three of us left to see it."

"You're a cheerful sort of fellow," smiled Hallock, congenital optimist.

"Come, we lose time here," said Palmer.

Before them, at length, there lay a sharp declivity, a narrow trough piercing the enshrouding forest growth. There was no road or trail, but down the incline the treasure hunters plunged, crossing slide rock, bits of vitrified overlay. The character of the vegetation now was such that the newcomers felt themselves in a world absolutely new, like to some fantastic dream.

At a point where they could make some sort of pause without too much inconvenience Palmer turned and held up his hand for a halt.

"Old Orizaba had her own way," said he. "Far back of us lies the valley which used to be the true course of La Luz. That's in a great labyrinth to the west and north. But, as I suppose, when the great valley we are seeking was countersunk in the earth crust the water that it caught bored its way out at the foot, and so built the little Rio La Luz as we know it today. In matters of this sort, you see, a thousand years is but a day."

They sat now, looking out over the mass of mingled ridges, broken peaks, long and easy slopes, covered with the black half tropic forest vegetation. Now, indeed, they were coming toward the close of their undertaking. They no longer had the apathy born of continuous fatigue. Something feverish, exciting, exalting, came into the blood of every one.

WHEN Palmer next pulled up they were quite through the notched passage of the last ridge. Before them widened out a magnificent mountainous view. Across, beyond the valley below, appeared a succession of bold eminences, covered with heavy, dark vegetation.

"Comrade, yonder lies your Italy!" said John Palmer. "That is what Napoleon said when his army looked down from the summit of the Alps. Well, we are over the last of our Alps now. Long road, eh?

"Well, I suppose there is no corner of the world better concealed. I don't believe any man ever would find that valley which lies below us."

"Why, nonsense, John! A good prospector can find anything, any place," said Allison, scoffing.

"Is it so? Well, there were no better prospectors than the Spaniards. But this country below us is as verdant today as it was in the time of Alvarado. There isn't a human habitation excepting my own within fifty miles, nor any likelihood of any. Superstition is one of the strongest influences in the world. These native people not only had superstitions, but were governed by them. There is no doubt in my mind that there was some sort of superstition which kept the natives out of exploration into this broken volcanic country. Perhaps their priests told them not to go in—I don't know. All I know is that I have lived here for many years, and I have been the only Robinson Crusoe."

He sighed, his head dropping while he sat, his hands folded on his saddle pommel. "Now that's all over," said he.

They did not press him any more. Turning, they all plunged down the last slope, their eyes exulting as they emerged at last into a flat valley that wound on away through scenes of placid beauty. This way, that, the slow turns of the shrugged shoulders of the mountains cut off the view. No trail marked the banks of the murmuring rivulet which was seeking its way out into the world.

And presently they came to their journey's end, or to that last part of it which meant their ultimate encampment.

"Now we are home!" said John Palmer, after two or three hours of steady marching.

They had halted before a low clump of buildings surrounded with trees planted in order by the hand of man. Here was a little clearing, back of it a little garden, a tiny field or two. There had been flowers here, roses; palms nodded, high and aloof.

"This is the only house within fifty miles in that direction," said John Palmer, slowly. "No one knows how far it would be to the west before there would show another trace. Come on in, men. There never were any locks on these doors. It is my home—that is to say, it was my home."

Luisa was the first now to enter the house. She ran on ahead, threw open the doors, uttered exclamations of eagerness, inviting all these, her friends.

Utterly wearied, the three men followed her into the interior. John Palmer sank down into a deep seat in front of the empty fireplace, sat staring. His friends, unwelcomed by the owner, stood about uneasy. Luisa beckoned them, leading to the rear door, which made out upon the walled garden, or what once had been a garden.

"She lies here," said she, sadly. "My sister. There was a little baby also." They understood her broken English. "Me—I have been the mother of Señor Juan," she added, proudly; "these several years! Except for me he could not have lived here. He is sad now. He will not talk."

"Strange place, Barry," said Hallock, after a time, as they turned away, hushed, awed. "Spooky, I call it. I swear, if we don't get some action before long I'm going loony. All this is getting on my nerves."

"We are at the end of the world here," said Barry Allison. "I presume pursuers could come up the valley if they knew we were here, but how could they know? I'm willing to say John Palmer has led us well. As for the rest of it——"

"Tomorrow, do you suppose?" asked Hallock.

"Very likely," Allison nodded. "I don't think Palmer will feel like waiting very long."

They turned back slowly toward the front door from which they just now had emerged. "Well, here we are," said Hallock, taking a deep breath. "God, what a strange place it is! We don't belong here, unless indeed we are forerunners of manifest destiny. Well, let's call it destiny. I don't know anything else which just exactly describes it."

The gentle voice of Luisa came to them. "Serafina is making coffee," said she, greeting them as they reëntered. "She will show you where you may find rooms. I have not disturbed Señor Juan."

They turned back to the central room. John Palmer still sat before the fireplace, staring into it.

"Come on, John!" called Hallock gaily. "We'll have our first meal in your house."

But John Palmer apparently did not hear him. He still sat motionless in his chair.

Long before the vogue of outdoor sports, Pond's knew these two skin essentials . . .

Two things a woman's skin must have in order never to betray fatigue and the effects of weather—

First—the kind of cleansing that not only keeps for you always the charm of fresh transparent skin but in addition, daily restores your skin's essential suppleness.

Second—the kind of protection that not only never fails but actually beautifies—that by its special property renews each time the smooth freshness of youth under the powder and rouge.

For years Pond's centered their whole effort on this vital problem for women until they finally perfected two entirely different creams to meet these two requirements—Pond's Cold Cream and Pond's Vanishing Cream.

First appreciated by the women who tax their skin most—the actress and the sportswoman—today millions of girls and women all over the world are using the famous Pond's method to offset the coarsening of everyday exposure, to keep their skin beautiful and young in spite of the hard treatment they give it. Buy both creams tonight. The Pond's Extract Co., 131 Hudson St., New York.

Edward Thayer Monroe

From charming Peggy Wood—"I have always had the best results from using Pond's Two Creams."

Try this famous method

FIRST—With the finger tips apply Pond's Cold Cream freely. The very fine oil in it softens your skin and penetrates every pore. Let it stay on a minute—now wipe it off with a soft cloth. The black that comes off shows you how carefully this cream cleanses. Do this twice. Your skin looks fresh and is wonderfully supple.

AND THEN—Smooth on Pond's Vanishing Cream very evenly—just enough for your skin to absorb. Now powder. How velvety your face feels to your hand. Nothing can redden or coarsen it. The powder is even and smooth over this flawless base. The appearance of your skin and the compliments of your friends will prove to you how wonderful for your skin these Two Creams are.

Some Women, like Alice, step into the Looking Glass and never come out

ALICE stepped into the Looking Glass and found Wonderland. She found quaint adventures—no reality.

Many women are like Alice when they face their mirrors. They see, not what they actually are like, but what they want to see. If these women came out of the Wonderland of their own making and into the light of the real world in which others see them, there would be less women on the streets today whose faces are unattractive, haggard and relieved only by sharp splotches of red.

Such women—and there are thousands of them—do not realize that the face powder and rouge which make them lovely in the soft lamplight of night cannot stand up under the harsh test of the sun's rays. They do not realize that what they need is a daylight shade of face powder. If they did, they would find that Bourjois, in Peaches-and-Cream* and Peaches* shades of JAVA* Face Powder, has solved their problem.

Peaches-and-Cream is a tan-and-rose out-of-doors shade, radiant and soft. Peaches is a delicate tan with the faintest touch of pink, giving the glowing effect of wind and sun.

Bourjois has been making JAVA Face Powder for 50 years. It took years of scientific experiment to develop Peaches-and-Cream and Peaches. For the first time in the history of face powder manufacture such shades can be offered to the women of America with the assurance that they have passed every test of the sun's harsh rays.

Peaches-and-Cream and Peaches, as well as White, Naturelle, Rachel and Rose, the other four JAVA shades, are on sale at all good drug stores. If you are unable to secure them at your druggist, mail the coupon for a sample.

THE HIGH COST OF PREPAREDNESS is a constant worry to Uncle Sam's war chiefs. One big saving is effected by using dummy projectiles in drilling gun crews to load the big guns. Here coast artillerymen at Fort MacArthur, San Pedro, Cal., are trying to ram a shell into a 14-inch gun in record time. Seconds may mean the saving of a fort when an enemy fleet is raining shells upon it from the sea. Officers hold stop watches on the gun crews in these drills, and there is considerable rivalry among the men in their constant fight for speed. (Photograph from Pacific & Atlantic)

The Battle of the Ice Kings

IN THE JAWS OF DEATH. Roused to fighting pitch by some trivial mishap, two giant polar bears in the London zoo attacked each other in a savage battle. Their thundering roars of rage and pain set the whole zoo panicky. It seemed only death could end their clash, but both were saved by a courageous keeper who separated them after a hard struggle. The bear on the attack here has sunk his vise-like jaws through the thick fur of his foe and is clamping a death scissors on his neck.

AN EAR HOLD. The under-dog in the battle has twisted himself free from his opponent's deadly neck-hold, but now the iron jaws of his foe are cutting cruelly into his head.

THE TIDE OF BATTLE TURNS. Giant body blows with his paws and twisting worthy of an acrobat have freed the bear which was on the defensive in the other pictures. Now he is pushing the attack. His teeth, stronger than steel, seem about to crush through his enemy's skull. At this stage the keeper broke up the battle royal.

Conspicuous nose pores

can be reduced

On your nose there are more fat glands than elsewhere.

Sometimes fat accumulates in these glands, when the skin is not active enough. Then the pores become enlarged.

You can overcome this trouble by the following treatment:

WRING a soft cloth from very hot water, lather it with Woodbury's Facial Soap, then hold it to your face. When the heat has expanded the pores, rub in very gently a fresh lather of Woodbury's. Repeat this hot water and lather application several times, stopping at once if your nose feels sensitive. Finish by rubbing your nose for a few seconds with a piece of ice.

This stimulating method of cleansing will gradually reduce the enlarged pores.

Get a cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap today, at any drug store or toilet goods counter. A 25-cent cake lasts a month or six weeks for this treatment and for regular toilet use.

'Tis a Pity

To let pretty teeth be clouded by a film

If you want whiter, cleaner teeth, learn how millions get them. Make this delightful test. The results will well repay you. And lifelong benefits may come to you and yours.

You must fight film

Film is your teeth's great enemy—that viscous film you feel. Under old methods, much of it clings and stays. It becomes discolored, then forms dingy coats, and teeth lose their luster.

Film also holds food substance, which ferments and forms acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay. Germs breed by millions in it. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea.

Very few escape these troubles, so you should fight that film.

Dental science has now found two ways. One disintegrates the film, one removes it without harmful scouring.

Many careful tests proved these methods effective. So a new-type tooth paste was created to apply them daily. The name is Pepsodent.

All the world over leading dentists now advise it. Millions of people of some 50 nations enjoy its benefits today.

You'll see and feel

Gray Hair

So Old-fashioned!

Restore natural color my safe, easy way

It is certainly old-fashioned and unprogressive to let gray hair spoil your looks and make you seem old. Restore the natural, youthful color my sure, safe, simple way, whether you are married or single, in business or living at home. No matter what your age or your circumstances, gray hair is a detriment.

This I learned many years ago, when my own hair prematurely turned gray. I perfected the scientific preparation, for my own use, which I now offer you.

What it is

Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer is a clear, colorless liquid, clean as water. Applied by simply combing through the hair; no skill, experience or outside aid required. No greasy sediment, nothing to wash off or rub off. No interference with shampooing, permanent waving or marcelling. The restored color is even and perfectly natural in all lights, either the strongest sunlight or bright electric light. It is there to stay—as permanent as it is perfect.

How I prove it

Don't take my word for these statements, but test my restorer for yourself. Send for the free trial bottle I offer and make the famous "single lock" test. Note the beauty and naturalness of the restored color and how easy is application. Note how soft and fluffy it leaves your hair.

Then, when you know exactly what Mary T. Goldman's is and what it will do, begin restoration of all your hair.

Coupon brings it

Fill out the coupon carefully, giving all information. If possible enclose a lock of hair in your letter. By return mail you will receive my patented free trial outfit, containing trial sized bottle with full instructions for testing on a single lock. When this test has proved to you how surely, safely and easily gray hair can be restored, get a full sized bottle from your druggist or order direct from me.

MAUDE MARTIN ELLIS was this bewildered little lady, her artistic soul amazed, perhaps, at the wonderful colorings of the great big world? FERDINAND WYTHE PECK, who claims he is the oldest native Chicagoan, was the gay young chap at the extreme right? This picture was taken while Mr. Peck was doing the gay French capital with other well known Chicago folks, about 1867, we are told. The others are, left to right: William R. Manierre, a former alderman and father-in-law of Edith Harrison Manierre, daughter of former Mayor Carter H. Forecasting Your Autumn Complexion

By Mme. Jeannette

A little foresight now will lay the foundation for the health and beauty of your skin during the trying days of the fall.

October may bring sunshine, but it generally brings also whirling winds, nippy mornings, and a host of evening engagements after the lull of summer vacations.

It is during this month that every woman should form the habit of careful daily attention to her skin—her face, neck, shoulders, arms, and hands.

Don't let your skin get dry

After the many hours of out-of-door life that always come with summer, every woman's skin tends toward an unhealthy dryness. Whatever your age, this is a condition for concern if you do not treat it properly. Pompeian Night Cream is the exact cream to use at this time. It has every property necessary to counteract dryness. It is a direct agent for sanitary cleansing, and it smooths and softens the dry tissue of the skin till the pores again have a chance to "breathe" and to give Nature an opportunity to again become beautiful.

I would advise a generous application of Pompeian Night Cream as unfailingly as you go to bed at night.

Rub the cream well over the surface—but do not attempt to rub hard. It is better and easier gently to pat the cream into the skin. Strike the surface covered with cream by using the flat of the fingers—quick little blows, and continue till at least some of the cream has disappeared.

Use soft cloths to wipe away the remaining traces of the cream and whatever may remain will soften the skin during your hours of sleep.

Morning loveliness

The first thing in the morning the skin may be "asleep," and there is nothing more helpful to arouse circulation than a wholesome splashing of cold water. This is not only good for the skin, but it is good for the whole body. You will find that even the most sluggish blood will begin to stir and a rose tone will appear.

Pat the face dry with your towel, or your bare hands if you prefer.

When you apply Pompeian Day Cream, take care to spread it on all parts of the skin, and to blend it smoothly till it disappears.

The Pompeian Beauty Powder should cover the neck and face with even thickness so you will not have a face of one tone and a neck of another.

Rouge for daytime? Certainly

A touch of rouge gives a healthy look that always makes for an effect of beauty and gives a new sparkle to the eyes too.

Pompeian Rouge comes in a convenient little compact that rubs off easily for use. The new Orange tint is surprisingly natural, especially when used with the Naturelle or Rachel tint of Beauty Powder.

Pompeian Lip Stick

This final touch is essential with the rose-petal cheeks—and its color is natural and healthy-looking.

Honeymooning in the Alps

THEY stepped out on the little balcony for their first look at the Alps in the moonlight.

"They are wonderful," she sighed.

"Not so wonderful as you—"

"—and so beautiful," she added, leaning against his shoulder.

"Not so beautiful as you," he added fervently. "You are always so complete, dear. Entirely aside from your pretty clothes—you always have such a flower-like skin, and there is a faint perfume about you too, like a flower—"

She glanced up shyly. "I like our honeymoon," she said quaintly.

For Instant Beauty

EVERY well-dressed woman today realizes that she must pay as much attention to the appearance of her skin as she does to her costume. These are women who appreciate the Pompeian Instant Beauty Quartet. The Quartet consists of Day Cream, Beauty Powder, Bloom (a rouge), and Lip Stick.

Apply according to the following order:

Distribute the Day Cream over the skin, covering every exposed surface. It vanishes as soon as used, leaving a delicate coating as a foundation for powder and a protection against the weather.

Apply the Beauty Powder next, distributing over face and neck with equal thickness. This powder is exceptionally soft and delicate, and adheres with remarkable tenacity.

Next select the right shade of the Bloom and blend on the cheeks in the normal places. The Orange Tint gives a more natural tone when blended with the Naturelle or Rachel shade of Beauty Powder.

The Lip Stick gives the slightly heightened tone to the mouth that is called for by accentuating the color in the cheeks with rouge. It is of a natural tone and of a consistency neither too hard nor "salve-like." Chisel-pointed end for easy, accurate application. Dainty telescoping gilt container.
